Vol.1

ADVENTURES

OF

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

In which are included,

MEMOIRS

OF A

LADY OF QUALITY.

IN FOUR VOLUMES.

VOLUME. I.

Respicere exemplar vita morumque jubebo. Doctum imitatorem, & veras binc ducere voces.

HOR.

LONDON:

Printed for R. BALDWIN, No. 47. and Robinson and Roberts, No. 25. in Pater-noster-row; and T. BECKET and T. CABELL, in the Strand.

M, DCC, LXXIX.

A D.V.E.W. T. C. A.

CONTENTS

OF THE

ansient orthografic active

FIRST VOLUME.

- CHAP. I. An account of Mr Gamaliel Pickle.
 The disposition of his sister described. He yields to her solicitations, and retires to the country. Page 19
- CHAP. II. He is made acquainted with the characters of Commodore Trunnion and his adherents; meets with them by accident, and contracts an intimacy with that commander.

 p. 7
- CHAP. III. Mrs Grizzle exerts herself in finding a proper match for her brother; who is accordingly introduced to the young lady, whom he marries in due season.

 p. 23
- CHAP. IV. The behaviour of Mrs Grizzle at the wedding, with an account of the guests. p. 29
- CHAP. V. Mrs Pickle assumes the reins of government in her own family; her fister-in-law undertakes an enterprise of great moment; but is for some time diverted from her purpose, by a very interesting consideration.
- CHAP. VI. Mrs Grizzle is indefatigable in gratifying ber sister's longings. Peregrine is born, and managed contrary to the directions and remonstrances of his aunt, who is disgusted upon that account; and resumes the plan which she had before rejected. p. 42

CONTENTS of Vol. I.

- CHAP. VII. Divers stratagems are invented and put in practice, in order to overcome the obstinacy of Trunnion, who at length is teased and tortured into the noose of wedlock.

 Page 56
- CHAP. VIII. Preparations are made for the Commodore's wedding, which is delayed by an accident that burried bim the Lord knows whither. p. 63
- CHAP. IX. He is found by the lieutenant; reconducted to his own house; married to Mrs Grizzle, who meets with a small missortune in the night, and asserts her prerogative next morning; in consequence of which, her husband's eye is endangered.

 p. 74
- CHAP. X. The commodore being in some cases restif, his lady has recourse to artifice in the establishment of her throne, she exhibits symptoms of pregnancy, to the unspeakable joy of Trunnion, who nevertheless is haulked in his expectation.

 p. 83
- CHAP. XI. Mrs Trunnion erects a tyranny in the garrison, while her husband conceives an affection for his nephew Perry, who manifests a peculiarity of disposition even in his tender years.

 p. 91
- CHAP. XII. Peregrine is fent to a boarding-school, becomes remarkable for his genius and ambition. p. 97
- CHAP. XIII. The commodore takes Peregrine under his own care. The boy arrives at the garrison;— is strangely received by his own mother;—enters into a confederacy with Hatchway and Pipes, and executes a couple of waggish enterprises upon his aunt.

 P. 107
- CHAP. XIV. He is also by their device engaged in an adventure with the exciseman, who does not find his account in his own drollery.

 p. 121
- CHAP. XV. The Commodore detects the machinations of the conspirators, and hires a tutor for Peregrine, whom he settles at Winchester school. p. 130
- CHAP. XVI. Peregrine distinguishes himself among his school-sellows, exposes his tutor, and attracts the particular notice of the master.

 p. 137

CONTENTS of Vol. I.

- CHAP. XVII. He is concerned in a dangerous adventure with a certain gardener; fublimes his ideas, commences gallant, and becomes acquainted with Miss Emilia Gauntlet. Page 143
- CHAP. XVIII. He inquires into the situation of this young lady with whom he is enamoured; elopes from school; is found by the lieutenant, conveyed to Winchester, and sends a letter with a copy of verses to his mistress.

 p. 156
- CHAP. XIX. His messenger meets with a missortune, to which he applies a very extraordinary expedient that is attended with strange consequences. p. 167
- CHAP. XX. Peregrine is summoned to attend his uncle, is more and more hated by his own mother; appeals to his father, whose condescension is deseated by the dominion of his wife.

 p. 175
- CHAP. XXI. Trunnion is enraged at the conduct of Pickle. Peregrine refents the injustice of his mother, to whom he explains his sentiments in a letter. Is entered at the University of Oxford, where he signalizes himself as a youth of an enterprising genius. p. 182
- CHAP. XXII. He is infulted by his tutor, whom be lampoons; makes confiderable progress in polite literature; and, in an excursion to Windsor, meets with Emilia by accident, and is very coldly received. p. 191
- CHAP. XXIII. After fundry unsuccessful efforts, he finds means to come to an explanation with his mifires; and a reconciliation ensues.

 p. 201
- CHAP. XXIV. He atchieves an adventure at the affembly, and quarrels with his governor. p. 214
- CHAP. XXV. He receives a letter from his aunt, breaks with the commodore, and disobliges the lieutenant, who, nevertheless, undertakes his cause. p. 223
- CHAP. XXVI. He becomes melancholy and despondent; is savoured with a condescending letter from his uncle, reconciles himself to his governor, and sets out with Emilia and her friend for Mrs Gauntlet's house.

 P. 233

CONTENTS of Vol. I.

- CHAP. XXVII. They meet with a dreadful alarm on the road, arrive at their journey's end. Peregrine is introduced to Emilia's brother, these two young gentlemen misunderstand each other. Pickle departs for the garrison.
- CHAP. XXVIII. Peregrine is overtaken by Mr Gauntlet, with whom he fights a duel, and contracts an intimate friendship. He arrives at the garrison, and finds his mother as implacable as ever. He is infulted by his brother Gam, whose presenter he disciplines with a horsewhip.

 p. 250
- CHAP. XXIX. He projects a plan of revenge, which is executed against the curate.

 p. 260
- CHAP. XXX. Mr Sackbut and his pupil conspire against Peregrine, who, being apprised of their design by his sister, takes measures for counterworking their scheme, which is executed by mistake upon Mr Gauntlet. This young soldier meets with a cordial reception from the commodore, who generously decoys him into his own interest.

 p. 267
- CHAP. XXXI. The two young gentlemen display their talents for gallantry, in the course of which they are involved in a ludicrous circumstance of distress, and afterwards take vengeance on the author of their mishap.

 p. 278
- CHAP. XXXII. The commodore fends a challenge to Gamaliel, and is imposed upon by a waggish invention of the lieutenant, Peregrine and Gauntlet. p. 286
- CHAP. XXXIII. Peregrine takes leave of his aunt and fifter, sets out from the garrison, parts with his uncle and Hatchway on the road, and, with his governor, arrives in safety at Dover.

 p. 292
- CHAP. XXXIV. He adjusts the method of his correspondence with Gauntlet; meets by accident with an Italian Charlatan, and a certain apothecary, who proves to be a noted character.

 p. 297

ADVERTISEMENT

and the relie of the self and the self isting at the Land danie has

TOTHE

SECOND EDITION.

AT length Peregrine Pickle makes his appearance in a new edition, in spite of all the art and industry that were used to stifle him in the birth, by certain booksellers and others, who were at uncommon pains to misrepresent the work and calumniate the author.

The performance was decried as an immoral piece, and a scurrilous libel; the author was charged with having defamed the characters of particular persons, to whom he lay under considerable obligations: and some formidable critics declared that the book was void of humour, character and sentiment.

These charges, had they been supported by proof, would have certainly damned the writer and all his works; and even unsupported as they were, had an unsavourable effect with the public; but, luckily for him, his real character was not unknown; and some readers were determined to judge for themselves, rather than trust implicity to the allegations of his enemies. The book was found not altogether unworthy of their recommendation: a very large impression has been fold in England; another was bought up in a neighbouring kingdom; the work has been translated the original lately increased in England. It was the author's duty, therefore, as well as his interest, to oblige the public, with this edition, which he has endeavoured to render less unworthy of their acceptance, by retrenching the superfluities of the first, reforming its manners, and correcting its expression. Divers uninteresting incidents are wholly suppressed; some humorous scenes he has endeavoured to heighten; and he slatters himself, that he has expunged every adventure, phrase and infinuation that could be construed by the most delicate reader into a trespass upon the rules of decorum.

ADVERTISEMENT.

He owns, with contrition, that in one or two instances, he gave way too much to the fuggeftions of personal resentment, and represented characters as they appeared to him at that time. through the exaggerating medium of prejudice: but he has in this impression endeavoured to make atonement for these extravagancies. Howfoever he may have erred in point of judgement or discretion, he defies the whole world to prove that he was ever guilty of one act of malice, ingratitude or dishonour. This declaration he may be permitted to make without incurring the imputation of vanity or prefumption, confidering the numerous fhafts of envy, rancour and revenge, that have lately both in private and in public, been levelled at his reputation.

Note, The two letters relating to the Memoirs of a Lady of Quality, inserted at the beginning of the third volume, were sent to the editor by a person of banour.

ADVENTURES

OF

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

CHAP. I.

An account of Mr Gamaliel Pickle. The disposition of his fifter described. He yields to her solicitations, and retires to the country.

one fide by the sea, and at the distance of one hundred miles from the metropolis, lived. Gamaliel Pickle, Esq; the father of that hero whose adventures we propose to record. He was the son of a merchant in London, who (like Rome) from small beginnings, had raised himself to the highest honours of the city, and acquired a plentiful fortune, though, to his infinite regret, he died before it amounted to a Plum, conjuring his son, as he respected the last injunction of a parent, to imitate his industry and adhere to Vol. I.

his maxims, until he should have made up the deficiency, which was a sum considerably less than fifteen thousand pounds.

This pathetic remonstrance had the defired effect upon his representative, who spared no pains to fulfil the request of the deceased; but exerted all the capacity with which nature had endowed him, in a feries of efforts, which, however, did not fucceed: for by that time he had been fifteen years in trade, he found himself five thousand pounds worse than he was when he first took possession of his father's effects: a circumstance that affected him so nearly, as to detach his inclinations from business, and induce him to retire from the world, to some place where he might at leifure deplore his misfortunes, and, by frugality, secure himself from want, and the apprehensions of a jail, with which his imagination was inceffantly haunted. He was often heard to express his fears of coming upon the parish; and to bless God, that, on account of his having been so long a housekeeper, he was intitled to that provision. In short, his talents were not naturally active, and there was a fort of inconfistency in his character; for, with all the defire of amasting which any citizen could postibly entertain, he was encumbered by a certain indolence and fluggishness that prevailed over every interested consideration, and even hindered him from profiting by that fingleness of apprehension, and moderation of appetites, which have fo frequently conduced to the acquisition of immense fortunes, qualities which he possessed in a very remarkable degree. Nature, in all probability, had mixed little or nothing instammable in his composition; or, whatever seeds of excess she might have sown within him, were effectually stifled and destroyed by the austerity of his education.

The fallies of his youth, far from being inordinate or criminal, never exceeded the bounds of that decent jollity which an extraordinary pot, on extraordinary occasions, may be supposed to have produced in a club of sedate book-keepers, whose imaginations were neither very warm nor luxuriant. Little subject to refined sensations, he was scarce ever disturbed with violent emotions of any kind. The passion of love never interrupted his tranquillity; and if, as Mr Creech says after Horace,

Not to admire is all the art, I know, To make men happy, and to keep them so;

Mr Pickle was undoubtedly possessed of that invaluable secret; at least, he was never known to betray the faintest sympton of transport, except one evening at the club, where he observed, with some demonstrations of vivacity, that he had dined upon a delicate loin of veal.

Notwithstanding this appearance of phlegm, he could not help feeling his disappointments in trade; and upon the failure of a certain underwriter, by which he lost five hundred pounds, declared his defign of relinquishing business, and retiring to the country. In this resolution he was comforted and encouraged by his only sister Mrs Grizzle, who had managed his family, since the death of his father, and was now in the thirtieth year of her maidenhood, with a fortune of five thousand pounds, and a large stock of oeconomy and devotion.

These qualifications, one would think, might have been the means of abridging the term of her celibacy, as the never expressed any aversion to wedlock; but, it feems, she was too delicate in her choice, to find a mate to her inclination in the city: for I cannot suppose that she remained fo long unfolicited; though the charms of her person were not altogether enchanting, nor her manner over and above agreeable. Exclufive of a very wan (not to call it fallow) complexion, which perhaps was the effect of her virginity and mortification, the had a cast in her eyes that was not at all engaging, and fuch an extent of mouth, as no art or affectation could contract into any proportionable dimension: then her piety was rather peevish than resigned, and did not in the least diminish a certain stateliness in her demeanour and conversation, that delighted in communicating the importance and honour of her family, which, by-the-bye, was not to be traced two generations back, by all the power of heraldry or tradition.

She feemed to have renounced all the ideas

the had acquired before her father ferved the office of fheriff; and that æra which regulated the dates of all her observations, was the mayoralty of her papa. Nay, fo folicitous was this good lady for the support and propagation of the family-name, that, suppressing every felfish motive, the actually prevailed upon her brother to combat with his own disposition, and even furmount it so far, as to declare a passion for the person whom he afterwards wedded, as we shall fee in the fequel. Indeed, the was the four that instigated him in all his extraordinary undertakings; and I question whether or not he would have been able to disengage himself from that course of life in which he had fo long mechanically moved, unless he had been rouzed and actuated by her incessant exhortations. London, she observed, was a receptacle of iniquity, where an honest unsuspecting man was every day in danger of falling a facrifice to craft; where innocence was exposed to continual temptations, and virtue eternally perfecuted by malice and flander; where every thing was ruled by caprice and corruption, and merit utterly discouraged and despised. This last imputation she pronounced with such emphafis and chagrin, as plainly denoted how far she confidered herfelf as an example of what she advanced; and really the charge was justified by the constructions that were put upon her retreat by her female friends, who, far from imputing it to the laudable motives that induced her, infinuated, in farcastic commendations, that she had good reason to be distatisfied with a place where she had been so long overlooked; and that it was certainly her wisest course to make her last effort in the country, where, in all probability, her talents would be less eclipsed, and her fortune more attractive.

Be this as it will, her admonitions, tho' they were powerful enough to convince, would have been infufficient to overcome the languor and wis inertia of her brother, had she not reinforced her arguments, by calling in question the credit of two or three merchants, with whom he was embarked in trade.

Alarmed at these hints of intelligence, he exerted himself effectually, he withdrew his money from trade, and laying it out in Bank-stock and India-bonds, removed to a house in the country, which his father had built near the sea-side, for the convenience of carrying on a certain branch of traffic in which he had been deeply concerned.

Here then Mr Pickle fixed his habitation for life, in the fix and thirtieth year of his age; and though the pangs he felt at parting with his intimate companions, and quitting all his former connexions, were not quite so keen as to produce any dangerous disorder in his constitution, he did not fail to be extremely disconcerted at his first entrance into a scene of life to which he was totally a stranger. Not but that he met with abundance of people in the country, who, in confideration of his fortune, courted his acquaintance, and breathed nothing but friendship and hospitality: yet even the trouble of receiving and returning these civilities, was an intolerable fatigue to a man of his habits and disposition. He therefore left the care of the ceremonial to his fifter, who indulged herfelf in all the pride of formality, while he himself having made a discovery of a public house in the neighbourhood, went thither every evening, and enjoyed his pipe and cann; being very well fatisfied with the behaviour of the landlord, whose communicative temper was a great comfort to his own taciturnity; for he shunned all superfluity of speech, as much as he avoided any other unnecessary expence.

CHAP. II.

He is made acquainted with the characters of Commodore Trunnion and his adherents; meets with them by accident, and contracts an intimacy with that commander.

THIS loquacious publican foon gave him sketches of all the characters in the county; and, among others, described that of his next neighbour, Commodore Trunnion, which was altogether singular and odd. "The commodore and your worship (faid he) will in a short time be hand and glove; he has a power of money; and spends like a prince—that is in his own way-for to be fure he is a little humourfome, as the faying is, and fwears woundily; though I'll be fworn he means no more harm than a fucking babe. Lord help us; it will do your honour's heart good to hear him tell a story, as how he lay along-fide of the French, yard-arm and yard-arm, board and board, and of heaving grapplings and stink-pots, and graps, and round and doubleheaded partridges, crows and carters -Laud Mave mercy upon us! he has been a great warrior in his time, and lost an eye and a beel in the fervice -Then he does not live like any other Christian land-man; but keeps garrifon in his house, as if he were in the midst of his enemies, and makes his fervants turn out in. the night, watch and watch (as he calls it) all the year round. His habitation is defended by a ditch, over which he has laid a draw-bridge, and planted his court-yard with patereroes continually loaded with shot, under the direction of one Mr Hatchway, who had one of his legs shot away, while he acted as lieutenant on board of the commodore's ship; and now being on halfpay, lives with him as his companion. The lieutenant is a very brave man, a great joker, and, as the faying is, hath got the length of his commander's foot-Though he has another favourite in the house called Tom Pipes, that was his boatswain's mate, and now keeps the servants in order. Tom is a man of few words, but an excellent hand at a fong concerning the boatfwain's whiftle, husslecap and chuck-farthingthere is not fuch another pipe in the county-So that the commodore lives very happy in his own manner; thof he be fometimes thrown into perilous passions and quandaries, by the application of his poor kinfmen, whom he can't abide, because as how some of them were the first occafion of his going to fea. Then he fweats with agony at the fight of an attorney; just for all the world, as fome people have an antipathy at a cat; for it feems he was once at law, for striking one of his officers, and cast in a swinging fum. He is, moreover, exceedingly afficted with goblins that disturb his rest, and keep fuch a racket in his house, that you would think (God bless us!) all the devils in hell had broke loofe upon him. It was no longer ago than last year about this time, that he was tormented the live-long night by two mischievous spirits that got into his chamber, and played a thousand pranks about his hammock, (for there is not one bed within his walls.) Well, Sir, he rung his bell, called up all his fervants, got lights, and made a thorough fearch; but the devil a goblin was to be found. He had no sooner turned in again, and the rest of the family gone to sleep, than the foul fiends began their game anew. The commodore got up in the dark, drew his cutlass, and attacked them both so manfully, that, in five minutes, every thing in the apartment went to pieces. The lieutenant hearing the noise, came to his assistance; and Tom Pipes being told what was the matter, lighted his match, and going down to the yard, fired all the patereroes as fignals of distress. Well to be fure, the whole parish was in a pucker: some thought the French had landed; others imagined the commodore's house was beset by thieves: for my own part, I called up two dragoons that are quartered upon me; and they fwore with deadly oaths, it was a gang of fniugglers engaged with a party of their regiment that lies in the next village; and mounting their horses like lusty fellows, rode up into the country as fast as their beafts could carry them. Ah, Master! these are hard times, when an industrious body cannot earn his bread, without fear of the gallows. Your worship's father (God rest his soul!) was a good gentleman, and as well respected in this parish, as e'er a he that walks upon neat's leather. And if your honour should want a fmall parcel of fine tea, or a few anchors of right Nantz, I'll be bound you shall be furnished to your heart's content. But, as I was faying, the hubbub continued till morning, when the parfon being fent for, conjured the spirits into the Red Sea; and the house has been pretty quiet ever fince. True it is, Mr Hatchway makes a mock of the whole affair; and told his commander in this very bleffed spot, that the two goblins were no other than a couple of jack-daws which had fallen down the chimney, and made a flapping with their wings up and down the apartment. But the commodore, who is very choleric, and does not like to be jeered, fell into a main high passion, and stormed like a perfect hurricane, swearing that he knew a devil from a jack-daw as well as e'er a man in the three kingdoms. He owned, indeed, that the birds were found, but denied that they were the occasion of the uproar. For my own part, Master, I believe much may be said on both sides of the question; thos to be sure, the devil is always going about as the saying is."

This circumstantial account, extraordinary as it was, never altered one feature in the countenance of Mr Pickle, who having heard it to an end, took the pipe from his mouth, faying with a look of infinite fagacity and deliberation, " I do suppose he is of the Cornish Trunnions. What fort of a woman is his spouse?" Spouse! (cried the other,) odds heart! I don't think he would marry the queen of Sheba. Lack-a-day! Sir, he wen't fuffer his own maids to lie in the garrison, but turns them into an out-house, every night before the watch is fet. Bless your honour's foul; he is, as it were, a very oddish kind of a gentleman. Your worthip would have feen him before now; for, when he is well, he and my good. Mr Hatchway come hither every evening, and drink a couple of canns of rumbo apiece; but he has been confined to his house this fortnight by a plaguy fit of the gout, which, I'll affure your worship, is a good penny out of my pocket."

At that instant, Mr Pickle's ears were faluted with fuch a strange noise, as even discomposed the muscles of his face, which gave immediate indications of alarm. This composition of notes at first resembled the crying of quails, and croaking of bull-frogs; but as it approached nearer, he could diftinguish articulate founds pronounced with great violence, in fuch a cadence as one would expect to hear from a human creature fcolding through the organs of an afs. It was neither speaking nor braying, but a surprising mixture of both, employed in the utterance of terms absolutely unintelligible to our wondering merchant, who had just opened his mouth to express his curiofity, when the landlord, starting up at the well known found, cried, "Odds niggers! there is the commodore with his company, as fure as I live;" and with his apron began to wipe the dust off an elbow chair placed at one fide of the fire, and kept facred for the ease and convenience of this infirm commander. While he was thus occupied, a voice still more uncouth than the former bauled aloud, "Ho! the house, a hoy!" Upon which the publican clapping an hand to each fide of his head, with his thumbs fixed on his ears, rebellowed in the fame tone, which he had learned to imitate, "Hilloah." The voice again exclaimed, "Have you got any attorneys aboard?" and when the landlord replied, "No, no;" this man of strange expectation came in supported by his two dependants, and displayed a figure every way answerable to the oddity of his character. He was in stature at least fix feet high, though he had contracted an habit of stooping, by living fo long on board; his complexion was tawny, and his afpect rendered hideous by a large fear across his nofe, and a patch that covered the place of one eye. Being feated in his chair, with great formality the landlord complimented him upon his being able to come abroad again; and having, in a whifper, communicated the name of his fellow-gueft, whom the commodore already knew by report, went to prepare, with all imaginable dispatch, the first allowance of his favourite liquor, in three separate canns, (for each was accommodated with his own portion apart), while the lieutenant fat down on the blind fide of his commander; and Tom Pipes, knowing his distance, with great modesty took his station in the rear. After a paufe of some minutes, the conversation was begun by this ferocious chief, who, fixing his eye upon the lieutenant with a sternness of countenance not to be described, addressed him in these words: " D-n my eyes Hatchway, I always took you to be a better feaman than to overfet our chaife in fuch fair weather. Blood! didn't I tell you we were running bump affore, and bid you fet in the lee-brace, and haul upon a wind?" "Yes, replied the other with an arch fneer. I do confess as how you did give such orders, after you had run us fool of a post, so as that the carriage lay along, and could not right herfelf." " I run you foul of a post! cried the commander; d-n my heart! you're a pretty dog an't you, to tell me fo aboveboard to my face ? Did I take charge of the chaife? Did I stand at the helm?" " No, (answered Hatchway;) I must confess you did not steer; but howsomever, you cunned all the way, and fo, as you could not fee how the land lay, being blind of your larboard eye, we were fast ashore, before you knew any thing of the matter. Pipes, who flood abaft, can testify the truth of what I fay." "D-n my limbs! (refumed the commodore,) I don't value what you or Pipes fay a rope yarn. You're a couple of mutinous-I'll fay no more; but you shan't run your rig upon me. Damn ye, I am the man that learnt you, Jack Hatchway, to fplice a rope, and raise a perpendicular."

VOL. I.

The lieutenant, who was perfectly well acquainted with the trim of his captain, did not chuse to carry on the altercation any farther; but, taking up his cann, drank to the health of the stranger, who very courteously returned the compliment, without, however, presuming to join in the conversation, which suffered a considerable pause. During this interruption, Mr. Hatchway's wit displayed itself in several practical jokes upon the commodore, with whom, he knew, it was dangerous to tamper in any other way. Being without the sphere of his vision, he securely pilfered his tobacco, drunk his rumbo, made wry faces, and (to use the vulgar phrase) cocked his eye at him, to the no small entertainment of the spectators, Mr Pickle himself not excepted, who gave evident tokens of uncommon satisfaction at the dexterity of this marine pantomime.

Mean while the captain's choler gradually fubfided, and he was pleased to defire Hatchway, by the familiar and friendly diminutive of Jack, to read a news-paper that lay on the table before him. This talk was accordingly undertaken by the lame lieutenant, who, among other paragraphs, read that which follows, with an elevation of voice that feemed to prognosticate something extraordinary. "We are informed, that admiral Bower will very foon be created a British peer, for his eminent fervices during the war, particularly in his late engagement with the French fleet." Trunnion was thunderstruck at this piece of intelligence. The mug dropt from his hand and shivered into a thousand pieces; his eye gliftened like that of a rattle-fnake, and fome minutes elapsed before he could pronounce, " Avast! overhaul that article again." It was no fooner read the fecond time, than fmitting the table with his fift, he started up, and with the most violent emphasis of rage and indignation, exclaimed, "D-n my heart and liver! 'tis a land lie, d'ye fee; and I will maintain it to be a lie, from the fprit-fail-yard to the mizen top-fail haulyards! Blood and thunder! Will. Bower a peer of this realm! a fellow of yesterday, that fcarce knows a mast from a manger; a fnottynose boy, whom I myself have ordered to the gun, for stealing eggs out of the hen-coops! and I Hawfer Trunnion, who commanded a ship before he could keep a reckoning, am laid afide, d'ye fee, and forgotten! If so be, as this be the case, there is a rotten plank in our constitution, which ought to be hove down and repaired, damn my eyes! For my own part, d'ye see, I was none of your Guinea pigs; I did not rife in the fervice by parliamenteering interest, or a handsome bitch of a wife. I was not hoisted over the bellies of better men, nor strutted athwart the quarter-deck in a laced doublet, and thingumbobs at the wrifts. Damn my limbs! I have been a hard-working man, and ferved all offices on board from cook's shifter to the command of a vessel. Here, you Tunley, there's the hand of a feaman, you dog." So faying he laid hold on the landlord's fift, and honoured him with fuch a squeeze, as compelled him to roar with great vociferation, to the infinite fatisfaction of the commodore, whose features were a little unbended, by this acknowledgment of his vigour; and he thus proceeded in a lefs outrageous strain: " They make a damned noise about this engagement with the French; but, agad! it was no more than a bumboat battle, in comparison with some that I have seen. There was old Rook and Jennings, and another whom I'll be damned before I name, that knew what fighting was! As for my own share, d'ye see, I am none of those that hollow in their own commendation; but if so be that I were minded to stand my own trumpeter, some of those little fellows that hold their heads fo high, would be taken all aback, as the faying is: they would be ashamed to shew their colours, d-n my eyes! I once lay eight glasses along-fide of the Floor de Loule, a French man of war, though her metal was heavier, and her complement larger by an hundred hands than mine. You, Jack Hatchway, damn ye, what d'ye grin at? D'ye think I. tell a ftory, because you never heard it before ?"

Why, look ye, Sir, (answered the lieutenant), I am glad to find you can stand your own trumpeter, on occasion: thos I wish you would change the tune; for that is the same you have been piping every watch for these ten monthspast. Tunley himself will tell you, he has heard it five hundred times." "God forgive you, Mr Hatchway, said the landlord, interrupting him; as I'm an honest man and a housekeeper, I never heard a syllable of the matter."

This declaration, though not strictly true, was extremely agreeable to Mr Trunnion, who, with an air of triumph, observed, "Aha! Jack, I thought I should bring you up, with your gibes and your jokes; but suppose you had heard it before, is that any reason why it shouldn't be told to another person? There's the stranger, belike he has heard it five hundred times took han't ve brother ?" addressing himself to Mr Pickle; who, replying with a look expressing curiosity, "No, never;" he thus went on : " Well, you feem to be an honest, quiet fortof a man: and therefore you must know, as I faid before, I fell in with a French man of war, Cape Finisterre bearing about fix leagues on the weather bow, and the chace three leagues to leeward, going before the wind : whereupon I fet my studding fails, and coming up with her, hoisted my jack and enfign, and poured in a whole broadfide, before you could count three rattlins in the mizen shrouds; for I always keep a good look out, and love to have the first fire." "That I'll be fworn. faid Hatchway; for the day we made the Triumph, you ordered the men to fire when the was hull-to, by the same token we below pointed the guns at a flight of gulls; and I won a cann of punch from the gunner, by killing the first bird." Exasperated at this farcasm, he replied with great vehemence, "You lie lubber! d - n your bones! what bufinefs have you to come always athwart my hause in this manner? You, Pipes, was upon deck, and can bear witness, whether or not I fired too foon. Speak, you blood of a ----, and that upon the word of a feaman: how did the chace bear of us when I gave orders to fire?"

Pipes, who had hitherto fat filent, being thus called upon to give his evidence, after diverse strange gesticulations, opened his mouth like a gasping cod, and with a cadence like that of the east wind finging through a cranny, pronounced, "Half a quarter of a league right upon our leebeam." " Nearer, you porpus-fac'd swab! (cried the commodore) nearer by twelve fathom : but, howsomever, that's enough to prove the falsehood of Hatchway's jaw-and fo, brother d'ye fee, (turning to Mr Pickle) I lay along-fide of the Floor de Loufe, yard-arm, and yard-arm, plying our great guns and fmall arms, and heaving in flink-pots, powder-bottles, and hand grenades, till our fhot was all expended, double-headed, partridge and grape: then we loaded with iron crows, marlin fpikes, and old nails; but finding the Frenchman took a great deal of drubbing, and that he had shot away all our rigging, and killed and wounded a great number of our men. d'ye fee, I resolved to run him on board upon his quarter, and fo ordered our grapplings to be got ready; but Monsieur perceiving what we were about, filled his topfails and sheared off, leaving us like a log upon the water, and our scuppers running with blood."

Mr Pickle and the landlord paid such extraordinary attention to the rehearsal of this exploit, that Trunnion was encouraged to entertain them with more stories of the same nature, after which he observed by way of encomium on the government, that all he had gained in the fervice was a lame foot and the loss of an eye. The lieutenant, who could not find in his heart to lofe any opportunity of being witty at the expence of his commander, gave a loofe to his fatirical talent once more, faying, "I have heard as how you came by your lame foot, by having your upper decks overstowed with liquor, whereby you became crank, and rolled, d'ye fee, in fuch a manner that by a pitch of the ship, your starboard heel was jammed in one of the scuppers; and as for the matter of your eye, that was knocked out. by your own crew when the Lightning was paid off: there's poor Pipes, who was beaten into all the colours of the rainbow for taking your part, and giving you time to shear off; and I don't find as how you have rewarded him according as he deserves." As the commodore could not demy the truth of these anecdotes, however unseafonably they were introduced, he affected to receive them with good humour, as jokes of the lieutenant's own inventing; and replied, " Ay, ay, Jack, every body knows your tongue is no flander; but, howsomever, I'll work you to an oil for this, you dog." So faying, he lifted up one of his crutches, intending to lay it gently a-cross Mr. Hatchway's pate; but Jack, with great agility, tilted up his wooden leg, with which he warded off the blow, to the no small admiration of Mr Pickle, and utter aftonishment of the landlord, who, by-the-bye, had expressed the same amazement, at the same feat, at the Tame hour, every night for three months before. Trunnion then directing his eye to the boatfwain's mate, " You, Pipes, (faid he) do you go about and tell people that I did not reward you for standing by me, when I was hussled by those rebellious rapscallions; damu you, ha'n't you been rated on the books ever fince?" Tom, who indeed had no words to spare, fat smoking his pipe with great indifference, and never dreamed of paying any regard to these interrogations, which being repeated and reinforced with many oaths, that, however, produced no effect, the commodore pulled out his purse, faying, " Here you bitch's baby, here's fomething better than a fmart ticket;" and threw it at his filent deliverer. who received and pocketed his bounty, without the least demonstration of surprise or satisfaction; while the donor turning to Mr Pickle, "You fee, brother, (faid he) I make good the old faying, we failors get money like horses, and spend it like affes; come, Pipes, let's have the boatfwain's whiftle, and be jovial." This musician accordingly applied to his mouth the filver instrument that hung at a button hole of his jacket, by a chain of the same metal, and though not quite fo ravishing as the pipe of Hermes, produced a found fo loud and shrill, that the stranger (as it were instinctively) stopped his ears, to preferve his organs of hearing from fuch a dangerous invasion. The prelude being thus exeoftrich that depended from the ceiling, and without once moving them from that object, performed the whole cantata in a tone of voice that feemed to be the joint iffue of an Irish bag-pipe, and a sow-gelder's horn; the commodore, the lieutenant and landlord joined in the chorus, repeating this elegant stanza,

a fillelishe out 1

Buftle, buftle, brave boys!

The third line was no fooner pronounced, than the cann was lifted to every man's mouth with admirable uniformity; and the next word taken up at the end of their draught with a twang equally expressive and harmonious. In short, the company began to understand one another; Mr Pickle seemed to relish the entertainment, and a correspondence immediately commenced between him and Trunnion, who shook him by the hand, drank to further acquaintance, and even invited him to a mess of pork and pease in the garrison. The compliment was returned, good fellowship prevailed, and the night was pretty far advanced, when the merchant's man arrived with a lanthorn to light his mafter home; upon which the new friends parted, after a mutual promise of meeting next evening in the same place.

man agrant boda at A P. III.

ministra alloydenistican

Mrs Grizzle exerts berfelf in finding a proper match for her brother; who is accordingly introduced to the young lady, whom he marries in due Seafon.

Have been the more circumstantial in opening the character of Trunnion, because he bears a considerable share in the course of these memoirs; but now it is high time to resume the consideration of Mrs Grizzle, who, since her arrival in the country, had been engrossed by a double care, namely, that of sinding a suitable match for her brother, and a comfortable yoke-fellow for herself.

Neither was this aim the result of any sinister or frail suggestion, but the pure dictates of that laudable ambition, which prompted her to the preservation of the samily name. Nay, so disinterested was she in this pursuit, that, postponing her nearest concern, or at least leaving her own fate to the silent operation of her charms, she laboured with such indefatigable zeal in behalf of her brother, that before they had been three months settled in the country, the general topic of conversation in the neighbourhood, was an intended match between the rich Mr Pickle and the fair Miss Appleby, daughter of a gentleman who lived in the next parish, and who, though he had but little fortune to bestow upon his children, had (to use his own phrase) replenished their veins with some of the best blood in the country.

This young lady, whose character and disposition Mrs Grizzle had investigated to her own fatisfaction, was destined for the spouse of Mr Pickle, and an overture accordingly made to her father, who being overjoyed at the propofal, gave his confent without helitation, and even recommended the immediate execution of the project with fuch eagerness, as feemed to indicate either a suspicion of Mr Pickle's constancy, or a diffidence of his own daughter's complexion, which, perhaps, he thought too fanguine, to keep much longer cool. The previous point being thus fettled, our merchant, at the instigation of Mrs Grizzle, went to visit his future father-in-law, and was introduced to the daughter, with whom he had, that fame afternoon, an opportunity of being alone. What passed in that interview, I never could learn, though from the character of the fuitor, the reader may justly conclude, that the was not much teized with the impertinence of his addresses. He was not, I believe, the less welcome for that reason: certain it is, she made no objection to his taciturnity, and when her father communicated his resolution, acquiesced with the most pious refignation. But Mrs Grizzle, in order to give the lady a more favourable idea of his intellects than what his conversation could possibly inspire, was resolved to dictate a letter, which her brother should transcribe and transmit to his mistress, as the produce of his own understanding; and had actually composed a very tender billet for this purpose; yet her intention was entirely frustrated by the misapprehension of the lover himself, who, in consequence of his sister's repeated admonitions, anticipated her scheme, by writing for himself, and dispatching the letter one afternoon, while Mrs Grizzle was visiting at the parson's.

Neither was this step the effect of his vanity or precipitation; but having been often assured by his lister, that it was absolutely necessary for him to make a declaration of his love in writing, he took this opportunity of acting in conformity with her advice, when his imagination was unengaged or undisturbed by any other suggestion, without suspecting in the least that she intended to save him the trouble of exercising his own genius. Lest therefore, as he imagined, to his own inventions, he sat down and produced the following morceau, which was transmitted to Miss Appleby, before his sister and counsellor had the least intimation of the affair.

Mifs SALLY APPLEBY.

Madam,

UNderstanding you have a parcel of heart, warranted found, to be disposed of, shall be willing to treat for said commodity, on reason-Vol. I.

able terms; doubt not, shall agree for same; shall wait of you for further information, when and where you shall appoint. This the needful from,

Yours, &c.

GAM: PICKT, E.

This laconic epiftle, simple and unadorned as it was, met with as cordial a reception from the person to whom it was addressed, as if it had been couched in the most elegant terms that delicacy of passion and cultivated genius could supply: nay, I believe, was the more welcome, on account of its mercantile plainness; because, when an advantageous match is in view, a sensible woman often considers the slowery professions and rapturous exclamations of love, as ensuring ambiguities, or at best impertinent preliminaries that retard the treaty they are designed to promote: whereas Mr Pickle removed all disagreeable uncertainty, by descending at once to the most interesting particular.

She had no sooner, as a dutiful child, communicated this billet doux to her father, than he as a careful parent visited Mr Pickle, and in presence of Mrs Grizzle, demanded a formal explanation of his sentiments with regard to his daughter Sally. Mr Gamaliel, without any ceremony, as fured him he had a respect for the young woman, and with his good leave, would take her for better for worse. Mr Appleby, after having expressed his satisfaction that he had fixed his affections in his family, comforted the lover with the affurance of his being agreeable to the young lady, and they forthwith proceeded to the articles of the marriage-settlement, which being discussed and determined, a lawyer was ordered to ingross them; the wedding-clothes were bought, and in short, a day was appointed for the celebration of their nuptials, to which every body of any fashion in the neighbourhood was invited. Among these Commodore Trunnion and Mr Hatchway were not foregotten, being the sole companions of the bridegroom, with whom, by this time, they had contracted a fort of intimacy at their nocturnal rendezvous.

They had received a previous intimation of what was on the anvil, from the landlord, before Mr Pickle thought proper to declare himself; in confequence of which, the topic of the one-eyed commander's discourse at their meeting for several evenings before, had been the folly and plague of matrimony, on which he held forth with great vehemence of abuse levelled at the fair fex, whom he represented as devils incarnate, fent from hell to torment mankind; and, in particular, inveighed against old maids, for whom he feemed to entertain a fingular aversion; while his friend Jack confirmed the truth of all his allegations, and gratified his own malignant vein at the fame time, by clenching every sentence with a fly joke upon the married state, built upon some allusion to a ship or feafaring life. He compared a woman to a great gun loaded with fire, brimftone, and noife, which being violently heated, will bounce and fly, and play the devil, if you don't take special care of her breechings. He faid the was like a hurricane that never blows from one quarter, but veers about to all points of the compairs he likened her to a painted galley curioufly rigged, with a leak in her hold, which her hufband would never be able to stop He observed that her inclinations were like the Bay of Bifcay; for why? because you may heave your deep sea lead long enough, without ever reaching the Bottom. That he who comes to anchor on a wife, may find him-Telf moored in damned foul ground, and after all, can't for his blood flip his cable; and that for his own part, thof he might make thort trips for pastime, he would never embark in woman on the voyage of life, because he was afraid of foundering in the first foul weather.

In all probability, these infinuations made some impression on the mind of Mr Pickle, who was not very much inclined to run great risks of any kind; but the injunctions and importunities of his fister, who was bent upon the match, overbalanced the opinion of his sea-friends, who finding him determined to marry, notwithstanding all the hints of caution they had thrown out, resolved to accept his invitation, and honoured his nuptials with their presence accordingly.

the companies of the control of the constitution and profession that extend equipment

The behaviour of Mrs Grizzle at the wedding, with an account of the guests.

dude the san carbo resal manner than T Hope it will not be thought uncharitable, if I A advance by way of conjecture, that Mrs Grizzle on this grand occasion, fummoned her whole exertion, to play off the artillery of her charms, upon the fingle gentlemen who were invited to the entertainment : fure I am, the difplayed to the best advantage all the engaging qualities the possessed: her affability at dinner was altogether uncommon, her attention to the guests was superfluously hospitable, her tongue was theathed with a most agreeable and infantine lifp, her address was perfectly obliging; and though, conscious of the extraordinary capacity of her mouth, she would not venture to hazard a laugh, the modelled her lips into an enchanting fimper, which played upon her countenance all day long; nay the even profited by that defect in her vision we have already observed, and securely contemplated those features which were most to her liking, while the rest of the company believed her regards were disposed in a quite contrary direction. With what humility of complaifance did the receive the compliments of those who could. not help praising the elegance of the banquet!

and how piously did she seize that opportunity of commemorating the honours of her fire, by obferving that it was no merit in her to understand fomething of entertainments, as the had occasion to prefide at fo many, during the mayoralty of her papa! Far from discovering the least symptom of pride and exultation, when the opulence of her family became the fubject of conversation, the affumed a feverity of countenance; and after having moralized on the vanity of riches, declared that those who looked upon her as a fortune, were very much mistaken; for her father had left her no more than poor five thousand pounds, which with what little the had faved of the interest fince his death, was all she had to depend upon : indeed, if the had placed her chief felicity in wealth, fhe should not have been so forward in destroying her own expectations, by advifing and promoting the event at which they were now fo happily affembled; but the hoped the should always have virtue enough to postpone any interested confiderations, when it should happen to clash with the happiness of her friends. Finally, fuch was her modelty and felf-denial, that the industriously informed those whom it might concern, that fhe was no less than three years older than the bride; though had she added ten to the reckoning, she would have committed no mistake in point of computation.

To contribute as much as lay in her power to the fatisfaction of all present, she in the afternoon regaled them with a tune on the harpficord, accompanied with her voice, which, though not the most melodious in the world, I dare say, would have been equally at their service, could she have vyed with Philomel in song; and as the last effort of her complaisance, when dancing was proposed, she was prevailed upon, at the request of her new sister, to open the ball in person.

In a word Mrs Grizzle was the principal figure in this festival, and almost eclipsed the bride, who, far from seeming to dispute the pre-eminence, very wisely allowed her to make the best of her talents; contenting herself with the lot to which fortune had already called her, and which she imagined would not be the less definable, if her fister-in-law were detached from the family.

I believe I need scarce advertise the reader, that during this whole entertainment, the commodore and his lieutenant were quite out of their element; and this, indeed, was the case with the bridegroom himself, who being utterly unacquainted with any fort of polite commerce, sound himself under a very disagreeable restraint during the whole scene.

Trunnion, who had fcarce ever been on shore till he was paid off, and never once in his whole life in the company of any semales above the rank of those who herd upon the Point at Portsmouth, was more embarrassed about his behaviour than if he had been surrounded at sea by the whole French navy. He had never pronounced the word Madam fince he-was born; fo that far from entering into converfation with the ladies, he would not even return the compliment, or give the least nod of civility when they drank to his health; and I verily believe, would rather have fuffered fuffocation than allow the simple phrase, your fervant, to proceed from his mouth, He was altogether as inflexible with respect to the attitudes of his body; for either through obstinacy or bashfulness, he sat upright without motion, infomuch that he provoked the mirth of a certain wag, who, addressing himself to the lieutenant, asked whether that was the commodore himself, or the wooden lion that used to stand at his gate? An image to which, it must be owned, Mr. Trunnion's person bore no faint resemblance.

Mr Hatchway, who was not quite so unpolished as the commodore, and had certain notions that seemed to approach the ideas of common life, made a less uncouth appearance; but then he was a wit, and though of a very peculiar genius, partook largely of that disposition which is common to all wits, who never enjoy themselves, except when their talents meet with those marks of distinction and veneration, which (in their own opinion) they deserve.

These circumstances being premised, it is not to be wondered at, if this triumvirate made no objections to the proposal, when some of the grave personages of the company made a motion for adjourning into another apartment, where they might enjoy their pipes and bottles, while the young folks, indulged themselves in the continuance of their own favourite diversion. Thus refeued, as it were, from a flate of annihilation, the first use the two lads of the castle made of their existence, was to ply the bridegroom so hard with bumpers, that in less than an hour he made divers efforts to fing, and foon after was carried to bed, deprived of all manner of sensation, to the utter disappointment of the bridemen and maids, who, by this accident, were prevented from throwing the stocking, and performing certain other ceremonies practifed on fuch occasions. As for the bride, the bore this misfortune with great good humour, and indeed, on all occasions, behaved like a discreet woman, perfectly well acquainted with the nature of her own fituation.

transferit des est and chief an remerit person tant also reposs C HoatP. Vinco, of the file halfall the brash and best a being to the fold of Mrs Pickle assumes the reins of government in her own family; her sister-in-law undertakes an enter-prise of great moment; but is for some time diverted from her purpose, by a very interesting consideration.

Hatever deference, not to fay submission, she had paid to Mrs Grizzle before she was so nearly allied to her family, she no sooner became Mrs Pickle, than she thought it incumbent upon her to act up to the dignity of the character; and the very day after the marriage, ventured to dispute with her lister-in-law on the subject of her own pedigree, which she affirmed to be more honourable in all respects than that of her husband; observing that several younger brothers of her house had arrived at the station of lord mayor of London, which was the highest pitch of greatness that any of Mr Pickle's predecessors had ever attained.

This prefumption was like a thunderbolt to Mrs Grizzle, who began to perceive that she had not succeeded quite so well as she imagined, in felecting for her brother a gentle and obedient voke-fellow, who would always treat her with that profound respect which she thought due to her superior genius, and be entirely regulated by her advice and direction : however, the ftill continued to manage the reins of government in the house, reprehending the servants as usual; an office she performed with great capacity, and in which she seemed to take singular delight, until Mrs Pickle, on pretence of confulting her eafe, told her one day she would take that trouble upon herfelf, and for the future assume the management of her own family. Nothing could be more mortifying to Mrs Grizzle than fuch a declaration, to which, after a confiderable paufe, and strange distortion of look, she replied, " I shall never refuse or repine at any trouble that may conduce to my brother's advantage." " Dear Madam, (answered the sister,) I am infinitely obbliged to your kind concern for Mr Pickle's interest, which I consider as my own, but I cannot bear to see you a sufferer by your friendship; and therefore, insist upon exempting you from the satigue you have borne so long."

In vain did the other protest that she took pleafure in the task; Mrs Pickle ascribed the assurance to her excess of complaisance, and expressed such tenderness of zeal for her dear sister's health and tranquillity, that the reluctant maiden found herself obliged to resign her authority, without enjoying the least pretext for complaining of her being deposed.

This diffrace was attended by a fit of peevish devotion that lasted three or four weeks; during which period, she had the additional chagrin of feeing the young lady gain an absolute ascendency over themind of her brother, who was perfuaded to fet up a gay equipage, and improve his housekeeping, by an augmentation in his expence, to the amount of a thousand a-year at least: though this alteration in the economy of his household, effected no change in his own dispofition, or manner of life; for, foon as the painful ceremony of receiving and returning vifits was performed, he had recourse again to the company of his fea-friends, with whom he spent the best part of his time. But, if he was fatisfied with his condition, the case was otherwise with Mrs Grizzle, who finding her importance in the family greatly diminished, her attractions neglected by all the male-fex in the neighbourhood, and the withering hand of time hang threatening over her head, began to feel the horror of eternal virginity, and in a fort of desperation, resolved at any rate to refeue herfelf from that reproachful and uncomfortable fituation. Thus determined, the formed a plan, the execution of which, to a fpirit less enterprifing and sufficient than her's, would have appeared altogether impracticable; this was no other than to make a conquest of the commodore's heart, which the reader will eafily believe was not very susceptible of tender impresfions; but, on the contrary, fortified with infenfibility and prejudice against the charms of the whole fex, and particularly prepoffeffed to the prejudice of that class distinguished by the appellation of old maids, in which Mrs Grizzle was, by this time, unhappily ranked. She nevertheless took the field, and having invested this feemingly impregnable fortrefs, began to break ground one day, when Trunnion dined at her brother's, by fpringing certain infnaring commendations on the honesty and fincerity of sea-faring people, paying a particular attention to his plate, and affecting a fimper of approbation at every thing he faid, which by any means fhe could construe into a joke, or with modesty be supposed to hear: nay, even when he left decency on the left hand, (which was often the case); the ventured to reprimand his freedom of speech with a gracious grin, faying, " Sure you gentlemen belonging to the fea have fuch an odd way with you." But all this complacency was fo ineffectual, that, far from fuspecting the true cause of it, the commodore, that very evening, at the club, in the presence of her brother, with whom, by this time, he could take any manner of freedom, did not fcruple to damn her for a fquinting, block-faced, chattering pifs-kitchen; and immediately after drank defpair to all old maids. The toast Mr Pickle pledged without the least hesitation, and next day, intimated to his fifter, who bore the indignity with furprifing refignation, and did not therefore defift from her scheme, unpromising as it feemed to be, until her attention was called off, and engaged in another care, which, for fome time, interrupted the progress of this design. Her sister had had not been married many months, when she exhibited evident fymptoms of pregnancy, to the general fatisfaction of all concerned, and the inexpressible joy of Mrs Grizzle, who (as we have already hinted) was more interested in the prefervation of the family-name, than in any other confideration whatever. She, therefore, no fooner discovered appearances to justify and confirm her hopes, than postponing her own purpose, and laying aside that pique and resentment she had conceived from the behaviour of Mrs Pickle, when she superseded her authority; or perhaps, confidering her in no other light than that of the vehicle which contained, and was destined to con-VOL. I.

vey her brother's heir to light, she determined to exert her uttermost in nursing, tending and cherishing her, during the term of her important charge. With this view she purchased Culpepper's Midwifery, which, with that fagacious performance dignified with Aristotle's name, she studied with indefatigable care, and diligently perused the Compleat Housewife, together with Quincy's Difpenfatory, culling every jelly, marmalade and conferve which these authors recommend as either falutary or toothsome, for the benefit and comfort of her fifter-in-law, during her gestation. She restricted her from eating roots, pot-herbs, fruit, and all forts of vegetables; and one day when Mrs Pickle had plucked a peach with her own hand, and was in the very act of putting it between her teeth, Mrs Grizzle perceived the rash attempt, and running up to her, fell upon her knees in the garden, entreating her, with tears in her eyes, to refift fuch a pernicious appetite. Her request was no sooner complied with, than recollecting that, if her fifter's longing was baulked, the child might be affected with fome difagreeable mark or deplorable difease, she begged as earnestly that she would swallow the fruit, and in the mean time ran for some cordial water of her own composing, which she forced upon her fifter, as an antidote to the poison she had received. is activer was calculated as

This excessive zeal and tenderness did not fail to be very troublesome to Mrs Pickle, who, having revolved divers plans for the recovery of her own ease, at length determined to engage Mrs Grizzle in such employment as would interrupt that close attendance which she found so teasing and disagreeable. Neither did she wait long for an opportunity of putting her resolution in practice. The very next day, a gentleman happening to dine with Mr Pickle, unfortunately mentioned a pine-apple, part of which he had eaten a week before at the house of a nobleman who lived in another part of the country, at the distance of an hundred miles at least.

The name of this fatal fruit was no fooner pronounced, than Mrs Grizzle, who, inceffantly watched her fifter's looks, took the alarm, because she thought they gave certain indications of curiofity and defire; and after having observed that the herself never could eat pine-apples, which were altogether unnatural productions, extorted by the force of artificial fire, out of filthy manure, asked with a faultering voice, if Mrs Pickle was not of her way of thinking? This young lady, who wanted neither flyness nor penetration, at once divined her meaning, and replied with feeming unconcern, that for her own part she should never repine, if there was not a pine-apple in the universe, provided she could indulge herfelf with the fruits of her own country.

This answer was calculated for the benefit of the stranger, who would certainly have suffered for his imprudence by the resentment of Mrs

Grizzle, had her fister expressed the least relish for the fruit in question. It had the defired effect, and re-established the peace of the company, which was not a little endangered by the gentleman's want of confideration. Next mosning, however, after breakfast, the pregnant lady, in pursuance of her plan, yawned (as it were by accident) full in the face of her maiden-fifter, who being infinitely disturbed by this convulsion, affirmed it was a symptom of longing: and infifted upon knowing the object in defire, when Mrs Pickle affecting an affected fmile, told her she had eaten a most delicious pine-apple in her sleep. This declaration was attended with an immediate foream, uttered by Mrs Grizzle, who instantly perceived her fifter furprized at the exclamation, clasped her in her arms, and assured her with a fort of hysterical laugh, that she could not help fcreaming with joy, because she had it in her power to gratify her dear fifter's wish; a lady in the neighbourhood having promised to send her in a prefent, a couple of delicate pine-apples which the would that very day go in quest of.

Mrs Pickle would by no means confent to this proposal, on pretence of sparing the other unnecessary fatigue; and assured her, that if she had any desire to eat a pine-apple, it was so faint, that the disappointment could produce no bad consequence. But this assurance was conveyed in a manner (which she knew very well how to adopt) that instead of dissuading, rather stimulated Mrs Grizzle to fet out immediately, not on a visit to that lady, whose promise she herself had feigned with a view of consulting her sister's tranquillity, but on a random search through the whole country for this unlucky fruit, which was like to produce so much vexation and prejudice to her and her father's house.

During three whole days and nights, did she, attended by a valet, ride from place to place without success, unmindful of her health, and careless of her reputation, that began to suffer from the nature of her inquiry, which was pursued with such peculiar eagerness and distraction, that every body with whom she conversed, looked upon her as an unhappy person, whose intellects were not a little disordered.

Baffled in all her refearches within the county, the at length resolved to visit that very nobleman, at whose house the officious stranger had been (for her) so unfortunately regaled, and actually arrived in a post-chaise at the place of his habitation, where she introduced her business as an affair on which the happiness of a whole family depended. By virtue of a present to his Lorship's gardener, she procured the Hesperian fruit, with which she returned in triumph.

a pradeappide system as the

the train and make medium the ich half

CHAP. VI. Son seld

personne de encente de la constitue and the filter and the second of the second

Mrs Grizzle is indefatigable in gratifying her sister's longings. Peregrine is born, and managed contrary to the directions and remonstrances of his aunt, who is disgusted upon that account; and resumes the plan which she had before rejected.

THE SAVE SAVE THE SAVE WITH

THE fuccess of this divice would have encouraged Mrs Pickle to practife more of the same fort upon her fister-in-law, had she not been deterred by a violent fever which feized her zealous alley, in consequence of the fatigue and uneafiness she had undergone; which, while it lasted, as effectually conduced to her repose; as any other stratagem she could invent. But Mrs Grizzle's health was no fooner restored, than the other, being as much incommoded as ever, was obliged, in her own defence, to have recourse to some other contrivance; and managed her artifices in such a manner, as leaves it at this day a doubt whether she was really so whimsical and capricious in her appetites as she herselfpretended to be; for her longings were not restricted to the demands of the palate and stomach, but also affected all the other organs of sense, and even invaded her imagination, which at this period feemed to be strangely diseased.

One time she longed to pinch her husband's ear; and it was with infinite difficulty that his fifter could prevail upon him to undergo the operation. Yet this talk was easy, in comparison with another the undertook for the gratification of Mrs Pickle's unaccountable defire; which was no other than to perfuade the commodore to fubmit his chin to the mercy of the big-bellied lady, who ardently wished for an opportunity of plucking three black hairs from his beard. When this proposal was first communicated to Mr Trunnion by the husband, his answer was nothing but a dreadful effusion of oaths, accompanied with fuch aftare, and delivered in fuch a tone of voice, as terrified the poor befeecher into immediate filence; fo that Mrs Grizzle was fain to take the whole enterprise upon herself, and next day went to the garrison accordingly, where having obtained entrance by means of the lieutenant, who, while his commander was affeep, ordered her to be admitted for the joke's-fake, the waited patiently till he turned out, and then accosted him in the yard, where he used to perform his morning-walk. He was thunder-ftruck at the appearance of a woman in a place which he had hitherto kept facred from the whole fex, and immediately began to utter an apostrophe to Tom Pipes, whose turn it was then to watch; when Mrs Grizzle falling on her knees before him, conjured him with many pathetic supplications, to hear and grant her request, which was no sooner signified, than he bellowed in such an outragious manner that the whole court re-echoed the opprobrious term bitch; and the word damnation, which he repeated with surprising volubility, without any sort of propriety or connection; and retreated into his penetralia, leaving the bassled devotee in the humble posture she had so unsuccessfully chosen to melt his obdurate heart.

Mortifying as this repulse must have been to a lady of her stately disposition, she did not relinquish her aim, but endeavoured to interest the commodore's counfellors and adherents in her cause. With this view she solicited the interest of Mr Hatchway, who, being highly pleafed with a circumstance so productive of mirth and diverfion, readily entered into her measures, and promised to employ his whole influence for her satisfaction: and as for the boatswain's mate, he was rendered propitious by the present of a guinea which the flipt into his hand. In thort, Mrs Grizzle was continually engaged in this negociation for the space of ten days, during which the commodore was so incessantly pestered with her remonstrances, and the admonitions of his affociates, that he fwore his people had a delign upon his life, which becoming a burden to him, he at last complied, and was conducted to the scene like a victim to the altar; or rather like a reluctant bear, when he is led to the stake amidst the shouts and cries of butchers and their dogs. After all, this victory was not quite so decisive as the conquerors imagined; for the patient being fet, and the performer prepared with a pair of pincers, a fmall difficulty occurred: the could not for fome time discern one black hair on the whole superfices of Mr Trunnion's face; when Mrs Grizzle, very much alarmed and disconcerted, had recourse to a magnifying glass that stood upon her toilette; and after a most accurate examination, discovered a fibre of a dusky hue, to which the instrument being applied, Mrs Pickle pulled it up by the roots, to the no small discomposure of the owner, who feeling the smart much more fevere then he had expected, flarted up, and fwore he would not part with another hair to fave them all from damnation.

Mr Hatchway exhorted him to patience and refignation, Mrs Grizzle repeated her entreaties with great humility; but finding him deaf to all her prayers, and absolutely bent upon leaving the house, she clasped his knees, and begged for the love of God that he would have compassion upon a distressed family, and endure a little more for the sake of the poor infant, who would otherwise be born with a grey beard upon its chin. Far from being melted, he was rather exasperated by this reslection; to which he replied with great indignation, "Damn ye for a yaw-sighted bitch! he'll be hanged long enough before he has any beard at all:" so faying, he disengaged himself from her embraces, slung out at the door, and halted homewards with fuch furprifing speed, that the lieutenant could not overtake him until he had arrived at his own gate; and Mrs Grizzle was fo much affected with his escape, that her fifter, in pure compassion, defired she would not afflict herself, protesting that her own wish was already gratified, for the had plucked three hairs at once, having from the beginning been dubious of the commodore's patience. But the labours of this affiduous kinfwoman did not end with the atchivement of this adventure; her eloquence or industry was employed without ceasing, in the performance of other talks imposed by the ingenious craft of her fifter-in-law, who at another time conceived an insuppressible affection for a fricassee of frogs, which should be the genuine natives of France; fo that there was a necessity for dispatching a messenger on purpose to that kingdom: but as she could not depend upon the integrity of any common fervant, Mrs Grizzle undertook that province, and actually fet fail in a cutter for Bologne, from whence she returned in eight and forty hours with a tub-full of those live animals, which being dreffed according to art, her fifter would not taste them, on pretence that her fit of longing was past; but then her inclinations took a different turn, and fixed themselves upon a curious implement belonging to a lady of quality in the neighbourhood, which was reported to be a very great curiofity; this was no other than a procelain chamber-pot of admirable workmanship, contrived by the honourable owner, who kept it for her own private use, and cherished it as an utenfil of inestimable value.

Mrs Grizzle shuddered at the first hint she received of her fifter's defire to possess this piece of furniture; because she knew it was not to be purchased; and the lady's character, which was none of the most aimable in point of humanity and condescension, forbad all hopes of borrowing it for a feason; she, therefore, attempted to reason down this capricious appetite, as an extravagance of imagination which ought to be combated and repressed; and Mrs Pickle to all appearance, was convinced and fatisfied by her arguments and advice: but, nevertheless, could make use of no other convenience, and was threatned with a very dangerous suppression. Roused at the peril in which she supposed her to be, Mrs Grizzle flew to the lady's house, and having obtained a private audience, disclosed the melancholy situation of her fifter, and implored the benevolence of her ladyship, who, contrary to expectation, received her very graciously, and confented to indulge Mrs Pickle's longing. Mr Pickle began to be out of humour at the expence to which he was exposed by the caprice of his wife, who was herself alarmed at this last accident, and for the future kept her fancy within bounds; in fo much, that without being subject to any more extraordinary trouble, Mrs Grizzle reaped the long wished for fruits of her dearest expectation in the birth of a fine boy, whom her fifter in a few months brought into the world.

I shall omit the description of the rejoicings, which were infinite on this important occasion, and only observe, that Mrs Pickle's mother and aunt stood godmothers, and the commodore affifted at the ceremony as godfather to the child, who was christened by the name of Peregrine, in compliment to the memory of a deceafed uncle. While the mother was confined to her bed, and incapable of maintaining her own authority, Mrs Grizzle took charge of the infant by a double claim; and superintended with furprifing vigilance the nurse and midwife in all the particulars of their respective offices, which were performed by her express direction. But no fooner was Mrs Pickle in a condition to re-affume the management of her own affairs, than the thought proper to alter certain regulations concerning the child, which had obtained in consequence of her fifter's orders, directing, among other innovations, that the bandages with which the infant had been fo neatly rolled up, like an Ægyptian mummy, should be loofened and laid afide, in order to rid nature of all restraint, and give the blood free scope to circulate; and with her own hands fhe plunged him headlong every morning in a tub full of cold water. This operation feemed fo barbarous to the tender-hearted Mrs Grizzle, that she not only opposed it with all her eloquence; shedding abundance of tears over the facrifice when it was made; but took horse immediately, and departed for the habitation of an eminent country physician, whom she consulted in these words. Pray, doctor, is it not both dangerous and cruel to be the means of letting a poor tender infant perish, by sousing it in water as cold as ice?" "Yes, (replied the doctor), downright murder, I affirm." "I see you are a person of great learning and sagacity, (said the other); and I must beg you will be so good as to signify your opinion in your own hand-writing." The doctor immediately complied with her request, and expressed himself upon a slip of paper to this purpose.

These are to certify whom it may concern, that I firmly believe, and it is my unalterable opinion, that whosoever letteth an infant perish, by sousing it in cold water, even though the said water should not be so cold as ice, is in effect guilty of the murder of the said infant, as witness my hand.

COMFEIT COLOCYNTH.

Having obtained this certificate, for which the physician was handsomely acknowledged, she returned exulting and hoping, with such authority, to overthrow all opposition. Accordingly, next morning, when her nephew was about to undergo his diurnal baptism, she produced the commission, whereby she conceived herself impowered to over-rule such inhuman proceedings. But, she was disappointed in her expectation, consident as it was; not that Mrs Pickle pretended to disfer in opinion from Dr Colocynth, " for whose character and sentiments (said she) I have such veneration, that I shall carefully observe the caution implied in this very certificate, by which, far from condemning my method of practice, he only afferts that killing is murder; an affeveration, the truth of which, it is to be hoped, I shall never dispute."

Vol. I.

Mrs Grizzle, who, footh to fay, had rather too superficially considered the clause by which she thought herself authorized, perused the paper with more accuracy, and was confounded at her own want of penetration. Yet, though she was confuted, she was by no means convinced that her objections to the cold bath were unreasonable; on the contrary, after having bestowed fundry opprobrious epithets on the physician, for his want of knowledge and candour, she protested in the most earnest and solemn manner against the pernicious practice-of dipping the child; a piece of cruelty which, with God's affiftance, the should never suffer to be inflicted on her own iffue; and washing her hands of the melancholy confequence that would certainly enfue, thut herfelf up in her closet, to indulge her forrow and vexation. She was deceived, however, in her prognostic; the boy, instead of declining in point of health, feemed to acquire fresh vigour from every plunge, as if he had been resolved to difcredit the wildom and forelight of his aunt, who, in all probability, could never forgive him for this want of reverence and respect. conjecture is founded upon her behaviour to him in the fequel of his infancy, during which fhe was known to torture him more than once, when the had opportunities of thrusting pins into his flesh, without any danger of being detected. In a word, her affections were in a little time altogether alienated from this hope of her family, whom the abandoned to the conduct of his mother, whose province it undoubtedly was to manage the nurture of her own child; while the herfelf refumed her operations upon the commodore, whom she was resolved at any rate to captivate and enflave. And it must be owned, that Mrs Grizzle's knowledge of the human heart never shone so conspicuous as in the methods the purfued for the accomplishment of this important aim.

Through the rough unpolished husk that cased the soul of Trunnion, she could easily distinguish a large share of that vanity and self-conceit that generally predominate even in the most savage breast; and to this she constantly appealed. In his presence she always exclaimed against the crast and dishonest dissimulation of the world; and never sailed of uttering particular invectives against those arts of chicanery, in which the lawyers are so conversant to the prejudice and ruin of their fellow-creatures: observing that in a sea-faring life, so far as she had opportunities of judging or being informed, there was nothing but friendship, sincerity, and a hearty contempt for every thing that was mean or selfish.

This kind of conversation, with the assistance of certain particular civilities, infenfibly made an impression on the mind of the commodore; and that the more effectual, as his former preposiessions were built upon very slender foundations; his antipathy to old maids, which he had conceived upon hearfay, began gradually to diminish when he found they were not quite fuch infernal animals as they had been represented; and it was not long before he was heard to observe at the club, that Pickle's fifter had not so much of the core of bitch in her as he had imagined. This negative compliment, by the medium of her brother, foon reached the ears of Mrs Grizzle, who, thus encouraged, redoubled all her art and attention; fo that in less than three months after, he in the same place distinguished her with the epithet of a damned sensible jade.

Hatchway taking the alarm at this declaration, which he feared foreboded something fatal to his interest, told his commander with a sneer, that she had sense enough to bring him to under her stern; and he did not doubt but that such an old crazy vessel would be the better for being taken in tow. "But howsomever, (added this arch adviser), I'd have you take care of your upper works; for if once you are made fast to her poop, agad! she'll spank it away, and make every beam in your body crack with firaining." Our fhe projector's whole plan had like to have been ruined by the effect which this malicious hint had upon Trunnion, whose rage and suspicion being wakened at once, his colour changed from tawny to a cadaverous pale, and then shifting to a deep and dulky red, fuch as we fometimes obferve in the fky when it is replete with thunder, he, after his usual preamble of unmeaning oaths, answered in these words: "Damn ye, you jurylegg'd dog, you would give all the stowage in your hold to be as found as I am; and as for being taken in tow, d'ye fee, I'm not so disabled but I can lie my course, and perform my voyage without any affistance; and, agad! no man shall ever fee Hawfer Trunnion lagging a-stern in the wake of e'er a bitch in christendom."

Mrs Grizzle, who every morning interrogated her brother with regard to the subject of his night's conversation with his friends, soon received the unwelcome news of the commodore's aversion to matrimony; and justly imputing the greatest part of his disgust to the satirical infinuations of Mr Hatchway, resolved to level this obstruction to her success, and actually sound means to interest him in her scheme. She had indeed, on some occasions, a particular knack at making converts, being probably not unacquainted with that grand system of persuasion, which is adopted.

by the greatest personages of the age, as fraught with maxims much more effectual than all the eloquence of Tully or Demosthenes, even when supported by the demonstrations of truth: besides, Mr Hatchway's fidelity to his new ally, was confirmed by his foreseeing in his captain's marriage an infinite fund of gratification for his own cynical disposition. Thus, therefore, converted and properly cautioned, he for the future suppressed all the virulence of his wit against the matrimoni. al state; and, as he knew not how to open his. mouth in the positive praise of any person whatever, took all opportunities of excepting Mrs. Grizzle by name, from the censures he liberally bestowed upon the rest of her sex. " She is not a drunkard, like Nan Castick of Deptford, he would fay; not a nincompoop, like Peg Simper of Woolwich; not a brimstone, like Kate Coddle of Chatham; not a shrew, like Nell Griffin, on the point Portsmouth; (ladies to whom, at different times, they had both paid their addresses) but a tight, good humoured, fensible wench, who knows very well how to box her compass; well trimmed aloft, and well fheathed alow, with a good cargo under her hatches." The commodore at first imagined this commendation was ironical, but hearing it repeated again and again, was filled with aftonishment at this surprising change in the lieutenant's behaviour; and after a long fit of muling, concluded that Hatchway himfelf harboured a matrimonial defign on the person of Mrs Grizzle.

Pleased with this conjecture, he rallied Jack in his turn, and one night toafted her health as a compliment to his passion; a circumstance which the lady learned next day by the usual canal of her intelligence, and interpreting as the refult of his own tenderness for her, she congratulated herself upon the victory she had obtained; and thinking it unnecessary to continue the reserve she had hitherto industriously affected, resolved from that day to fweeten her behaviour towards him withfuch a dish of affection, as could not fail to perfuade him that he had inspired her with a reciprocal flame. consequence of this determination, he was invited to dinner, and while he stayed, treated with fuch cloying proofs of her regard, that not only the rest of the company, but even Trunnion himfelf, perceived her drift: and taking the alarm accordingly, could not help exclaiming, " Oho! I fee how the land lies, and if I don't weather the point, I'll be damn'd." Having thus expressed himself to his afflicted inamorata, he made the best of his way to the garrison, in which he shut himself up for the space of ten days, and had no communication with his friends and domesticks but by looks, which were most significantly picturesque.

CHAP. VII.

Divers stratagems are invented and put in practice, in order to overcome the obstinacy of Trunnion, who at length is teised and tortured into the noofe of wedlock.

THIS abrupt departure and unkind declaration affected Mrs Grizzle fo much, that the fell fick of forrow and mortification; and after having confined herfelf to her bed for three days, fent for her brother, told him the perceived her end drawing near, and defired that a lawyer might be brought, in order to write her last will. Mr Pickle, furprised at her demand, began to act the part of a comforter, affuring her that her diffemper was not at all dangerous; and that he would instantly send for a physician, who would convince her that the was in no manner of jeopardy? fo that there was no occasion at present to employ any officious attorney in fuch a melancholy talk. Indeed, this affectionate brother was of opinion that a will was altogether superfluous at any rate, as he himself was heir at law to his fifter's whole, real and personal estate. But she infifted upon his compliance with fuch determined obstinacy, that he could no longer resist her importunities; and a scrivener arriving, she dictated and executed her will, in which the bequeathed to commodore Trunnion one thousand pounds, to purchase a mourning ring, which she hoped he would wear as a pledge of her friendship and affection. Her brother, though he did not much relish this testimony of her love, nevertheless that same evening gave an account of this particular to Mr Hatchway, who was also, as Mr Pickle assured him, generously remembered by the testatrix.

The lieutenant, fraught with this piece of intelligence, watched for an opportunity, and as foon as he perceived the commodore's features a little unbended from that ferocious contraction they had retained fo long, ventured to inform him that Pickle's fifter lay at the point of death, and that she had left him a thousand pounds in her will. This piece of news overwhelmed him with confusion, and Mr Hatchway imputing his filence to remorfe, refolved to take advantage of that favourable moment, and counselled him to go and visit the poor young woman, who was dying for love of him. But his admonition happened to be fomewhat unseasonable; for Trunnion no fooner heard him mention the cause of her disorder than his morofity recurring, he burst out into a violent fit of curfing, and forthwith betook himself again to his hammock, where he lay uttering in a low growling tone of voice, a repetition of oaths and imprecations, for the space of four and twenty hours, without ceasing. This was a delicious meal to the lieutenant, who, eager to inhance the pleasure of the entertainment, and at the same time conduce to the success of the cause he had espoused, invented a stratagem, the execution of which had all the effect he could defire. He prevailed upon Pipes, who was devoted to his fervice, to get upon the top of the chimney belonging to the commodore's chamber, at midnight, and to lower down by a rope a bunch of stinking whitings, which being performed, he put afpeaking trumpet to his mouth, and hollowed down the vent, in a voice like thunder, "Trunnion! Trunnion! turn out and be fpliced, or lie still and be damned." This dreadful note, the terror of which was increased by the filence and darkness of the night, as well as the echo of the paffage through which it was conveyed, no fooner reached the ears of the aftonished commodore, than turning his eye towards the place from whence this folern address feemed to proceed, he beheld a glittering object that vanished in an instant. Just as his superstitious fear had improved the apparition into some supernatural meffenger cloathed in fhining array, his opinion was confirmed by a fudden explosion, which he took for thunder, though it was no other than the noise of a pistol fired down the chimney by the boatfwain's mate, according to the instructions he had received; and he had time enough to descend before he was in any. danger of being detected by his commander, who could not for a whole hour recollect himfelf from the amazement and consternation which had overpowered his faculties.

At length, however, he got up and rung his bell with great agitation. He repeated the fummons more than once, but no regard being paid to this alarm, his dread returned with double terror, a cold fweat bedewed his limbs, his knees knocked together, his hair briftled up, and the remains of his teeth were shattered to pieces in the convultive vebrations of his jaws.

In the midst of this agony, he made one defperate effort, and burfting open the door of his apartment, bolted into Hatchway's chamber, which happened to be on the same floor. There he found the lieutenant in a counterfeit swoon, who pretended to wake from his trance in an ejaculation of " Lord have mercy upon us!" And being questioned by the terrified commodore with regard to what had happened, affured him he had heard the same voice and clap of thunder by which Trunnion himself had been discompofed.

Pipes, whose turn it was to watch, concurred in giving evidence to the same purpose; and the commodore not only owned that he had heard the voice, but likewise communicated his vision. with all the aggrevation which his difturbed fancy fuggefted.

A consultation immediately ensued, in which Mr Hatchway very gravely observed, that the finger of God was plainly perceivable in those fignals; and that it would be both finful and foolish to disregard his commands, especially as the match proposed was in all respects, more advantageous than any one of his years and infirmities could reasonably expect; declaring that for his own part he would not endang er his soul and body by living one day longer under the same roof with a man who despised the holy will of heaven; and Tom Pipes adhered to the same pious resolution.

Trunnion's perseverance could not resist the number and diversity of considerations that assume and diversity of considerations that assume and it is the revolved in silence all the opposite motives that occurred to his reslection; and aster having been, to all appearance, bewildered in the labyrinth of his own thoughts, he wiped the sweat from his forehead, and heaving a piteous groan, yielded to their remonstrances in these words: "Well, since it must be so, I think we must e'en graple. But damn my eyes! 'tis a damn'd hard case that a fellow of my years should be compell'd, d'ye see, to beat up to windward all the rest of my life, against the current of his own inclination."

This important article being discussed, Mr Hatchway set out in the morning to visit the despairing shepherdess, and was handsomely rewarded for the enlivening tidings with which he blessed her ears. Sick as she was, she could not help laughing heartily at the contrivance, in confequence of which her swain's affent had been obtained, and gave the lieutenant ten guineas for Tom Pipes, in consideration of the part he acted in the farce.

In the afternoon the commodore fuffered himfelf to be conveyed to her apartment, like a felon to execution, and was received by her in a languishing manner and genteel dishabille, accompanied by her fifter-in-law; who was for very obvious reasons, extremely solicitous about her fuccefs. Though the lieutenant had tutored him touching his behaviour at this interview, he made a thousand wry faces before he could pronounce the simple falutation of How d'ye? to his mistress; and after his counsellor had urged him with twenty or thirty whispers, to each of which he had replied aloud, " Damn your eyes, I won't," he got up, and halting towards the couch on which Mrs Grizzle reclined in a state of strange expectation, he seized her hand and pressed it to his lips; but this piece of gallantry he performed in fuch a reluctant, uncouth, indignant manner, that the nymph had need of all her resolution to endure the compliment without thrinking; and he himself was so disconcerted at what he had done, that he instantly retired to the other end of the room, where he fat filent, and broiled with shame and vexation. Mrs Pickle, like a fensible matron, quitted the place, on pretence of going to the nursery; and Mr Hatchway taking the hint, recollected that he had left his tobacco pouch in the parlour, whither he immediately descended, leaving the two lovers to their mutual endearments. Never had the commodore found himself in such a difagree. able dilemma before. He fat in an agony of fuspence, as if he every moment dreaded the diffolution of nature; and the imploring fighs of his future bride added, if possible, to the pangs of his distress. Impatient of his situation, he rolled his eye a-round in quest of some relief, and unable to contain himself, exclaimed " Damnation feize the fellow and his pouch too! I believe he has sheared off and left me here in the stays." Mrs Grizzle, who could not help taking fome notice of this manifestation of chagrin, lamented her unhappy fate in being so disagreeable to him that he could not put up with her company for a few moments without repining; and began in very tender terms to reproach him with his inhumanity and indifference. To this expostulation he replied, " Zounds? what would the woman have? let the parson do his office when he wool, here I am ready to be reeved in the matrimonial block, d'ye fee, and damn all nonfenfical palaver." So faying, he retreated, leaving his mistress not at all disobliged at his plain-dealing. That same evening the treaty of marriage was brought upon the carpet, and by means of Mr Pickle and the lieutenant, feetled to the fatisfaction of all parties, without the intervention of lawyers, whom Mr Trunnion expressly excluded rom all fhare in the bufiness; making that condition the indispensible preliminary of the whole agreement. Things being brought to this bearing, Mrs Grizzle's heart dilated with joy; her health, which, by-the-bye, was never dangerously impaired, she recovered as if by enchantment; and a day being fixed for the nuptials, employed the short period of her celibacy in chusing ornaments for the celebration of her entrance into the married state.

CHAP. VIII.

respect to the state of the property of the

THE FEUT BAS

determination (page 25-yes males of the second

Preparations are made for the commodore's wedding, which is delayed by an accident that hurried him the Lord knows whither.

on spread all over the county; and, on the day appointed for their spousals, the church was surrounded by an inconceivable multitude. The commodore, to give a specimen of his gallantry, by the advice of his friend Hatchway, resolved to appear on horseback on the grand occasion, at the head of all his male attendants, whom he had rigged with the white shirts and black caps formerly belonging to his barge's crew; and he bought a couple of hunters for the accommodation of himself and his lieutenant. With this equipage then he set out from the garrison for the church, after having dispatched a messenger to apprise the bride that he and his company were mounted. She got immediately into the coach, accompanied by her brother and his wife, and drove directly to the place of affignation, where feveral pews were demolished, and divers persons almost pressed to death, by the eagerness of the crowd that broke in to see the ceremony performed. Thus arrived at the altar, and the priest in attendance, they waited a whole half hour for the commodore, at whose slowness they began to be under some apprehension, and accordingly dismissed a servant to quicken his pace. The valet having rode fomething more than a mile, espied the whole troop disposed in a long field, croffing the road obliquely, and headed by the bridegroom and his friend Hatchway, who finding himfelf hindered by a hedge from proceeding farther in the fame direction, fired a piftol, and stood over to the other side, making an obtuse angle with the line of his former courfe; and the rest of the fquadron followed his example, keeping always in the rear of each other, like a flight of wild geefe.

Surprised at this strange method of journeying, the messenger came up, and told the commodore that his lady and her company expected him in the church, where they had tarried a considerable time, and were beginning to be very uneasy at his delay; and, therefore, desired he would proceed with more expedition. To this message Mr Trunnion replied, "Hark ye, brother, don't you fee we make all possible speed? go back and tell those who fent you, that the wind has shifted fince we weighed anchor, and that we are obliged to make very fhort trips in tacking, by reason of the narrowness of the channel; and that, as we lie within fix points of the wind, they must make some allowance for variation and leeway." " Lord, Sir, faid the valet, what occafiou have you to go zig zag in that manner? Do but clap spurs to your horses, and ride straight forward, and I'll engage you shall be at the church porch in less than a quarter of an hour." What! right in the wind's eye? answered the commander ; abey ! brother, where did you learn your navigation? Hawfer Trunnion is not to be taught at this time of day how to lie his courfe, or keep his own reckoning. And as for you, brother, you know best the trim of your own frigate." The courier finding he had to do with people who would not be eafily perfuaded out of their own opinions, returned to the temple, andmade a report of what he had feen and heard. to the no fmall confolation of the bride, who had begun to discover some signs of disquiet. Composed, however, by this piece of intelligence, the exerted her patience for the space of another half hour, during which period feeing no bridegroom arrive, the was exceedingly alarmed; fo that all the spectators could easily perceive her perturbation, which manifested itself in frequent palpitations, heart-heavings, and alterations of countenance, in spite of the assistance of a smelling-bottle which she incessantly applied to her nostrils.

Various were the conjectures of the company on this occasion: some imagined he had mistaken the place of rendezvous, as he had never been at church fince he first settled in that parish; others believed he had met with fome accident, in confequence of which his attendants had carried him back to his own house; and a third fet, in which the bride herfelf was thought to be comprehended, could not help fuspecting that the commodore had changed his mind. But all these suppositions, ingenious as they were, happened to be wide of the true cause that detained him, which was no other than this: the commodore and his crew had by dint of turning, almost weathered the parson's house that stood to windward of the church, when the notes of a pack of hounds unluckily reached the ears of the two hunters which Trunnion and the lieutenant bestrode. These fleet animals no fooner heard the enlivening found, than eagre for the chace, they fprung away all of a fudden, and strained every nerve to partake of the sport; flew across the fields with incredible fpeed, overleaped hedges and ditches, and every thing in their way, without the least regard to their unfortunate riders. The lieutenant, whose fleed had got the heels of the other, finding it would be great folly and presumption in him to pretend to keep the faddle with his wooden leg, very wifely took the opportunity of throwing himself off in his passage through a field of rich clover, among which he lay at his eafe; and feeing his captain advancing at full gallop, hailed him with the falutation of "What chear? ho!" The commodore, who was in infinite diffress, eyeing him askance, as he passed, replied with a faultering voice, "O damn you! you are fafe at an anchor; I wish to God I were as fast moored." Nevertheless, conscious of his disabled heel, he would not venture to try the experiment which had fucceeded fo well with Hatchway, but refolved to flick as close as possible to his horse's back, until providence should interpose in his behalf. With this view he dropped his whip, and with his right hand laid fast hold on the pummel, contracting every muscle in his body to secure himself in the seat, and grinning most formidably, in confequence of this exertion. In this attitude he was hurried on a confiderable way, when all of a fudden his view was comforted by a five ban-gate that appeared before him, as he never doubted that there the career of his hunter must necessarily end. But alas! he reckoned without his hoft; far from halting at this obstruction, the horse sprung over it with amazing agility, to the utter confusion and disorder of his owner who loft his hat and periwig in the leap, and now began to think in good earnest, that he was actually mounted on the back of the devil. He recommended himself to God, his reflection forlook him, his eye-fight and all his other senses failed, he quitted the reins, and fastening by instinct on the mane, was in this condition conveyed into the midst of the sportsmen, who were astonished at the sight of such an apparition. Neither was their surprise to be wondered at, if we restect on the sigure that presented itself to their view. The commodore's person was at all times an object of admiration; much more so on this occasion, when every singularity was aggravated by the circumstances of his dress and disaster.

He had put on in honour of his nuptials, his best coat of blue broad cloath, cut by a taylor of Ramfgate, and trimmed with five dozen of brafs buttons, large and small; his breeches were of the same piece, fastened at the knees with large bunches of tape; his waiftcoat was of red plush. lapelled with green velvet, and garnished with vellum holes; his boots bore an intimate refemblance both in colour and shape to a pair of leather buckets; his shoulder was graced with a broad buff belt, from whence depended a huge hanger, with a hilt like that of a back fword; and on each fide of his pummel appeared a rufty piftol rammed in a case covered with a bear-skin. The loss of his tye-periwig and laced hat, which were curiofities of the kind, did not at all contribute to the improvement of the picture; but, on the contrary, by exhibiting his bald pate, and the natural extension of his lanthorn jaws, added to the peculiarity and extravagance of the whole. Such:

a spectacle could not have failed of diverting the whole company from the chace, had his horse thought proper to pursue a different route, but the beaft was too keen a sporter to choose any other way than that which the stag followed; and therefore, without stopping to gratify the curiofity of the spectators, he in a few minutes outstripped every hunter in the field. There being a deep hollow way betwixt him and the hounds, rather than ride round about the length of a furlong to a path that croffed the lane, he transported himfelf at one jump, to the unspeakable aftonishment and terror of a waggoner who chanced to be underneath, and faw this phænomenon fly over his carriage. This was not the only adventure he atchieved. The stag having taken a deep river that lay in his way, every man directed his course to a bridge in the neighbourhood; but our bridegroom's courfer despising all such conveniences, plunged into the stream without hesitation, and fwam in a twinkling to the opposite shore. This sudden immersion into an element of which Trunnion was properly a native, in all probability helped to recruit the exhausted spirits of his rider, who at his landing on the other fide gave fome tokens of fenfation, by hollowing aloud for affistance, which he could not possibly receive, because his horse still maintained the advantage he had gained, and would not allow himfelf to be overtaken.

and at long to one at it o got tomen account up him

In short, after a long chace that lasted several hours, and extended to a dozen miles at least, he was the first in at the death of the deer, being seconded by the lieutenant's gelding, which, actuated by the same spirit, had, without a rider, sollowed his companion's example.

Our bridegroom finding himself at last brought up, or, in other words, at the end of his career, took the opportunity of this first pause, to desire the huntsmen would lend him a hand in dismounting; and was by their condescension safely placed on the grass, where he sat staring at the company as they came in, with such wildness of assonishment in his looks, as if he had been a creature of another species dropt among them from the clouds.

Before they had fleshed the hounds, however, he recollected himself, and seeing one of the sportsmen take a small flask out of his pocket and apply it to his mouth, judged the cordial to be no other than neat Coniac, which it really was! and expressing a desire of participation, was immediately accommodated with a moderate dose, which perfectly compleated his recovery.

By this time he and his two horses bad engrossed the attention of the whole crowd; while some admired the elegant proportion and uncommon spirit of the two animals, the rest contemplated the surprising appearance of their master, whom before they had only seen en passant; and at length one of the gentlemen accosting him very courteously, signified his wonder at seeing him in fuch an equipage, and asked if he had not dropped his companion by the way. "Why, look ye, brother, (replied the commodore), mayhap you think me an odd fort of a fellow, feeing me in this trim, especially as I have lost part of my rigging; but this here is the case d'ye see: I weighed anchor from my own house this morning at ten A. M. with fair weather, and a favourable breeze at fouth fouth-east, being bound to the next church on the voyage of matrimony; but howsomever, we had not run down a quarter of a league, when the wind shifting, blowed directly in our teeth; fo that we were forced to tack all the way, d'ye see, and had almost beat up within fight of port, when these fons of bitches of horses, which I had bought but two days before, (for my own part, I believe they are devils incarnate), luffed round in a trice, and then refuling the helm, drove away like lightning with me and my lieutenant, who foon came to anchor in an exceeding good birth. As for my own part, I have been carried over rocks, and flats, and quickfands; among which I have pitched away a special good tye-periwig, and an iron bound hat; and at laft, thank God! am got into smooth water and fafe riding : but if ever I venture my carcafe upon fuch a hare'um scare'um blood of a bitch again, my name is not Hawfer Trunnion, d-n my eyes !"

One of the company, struck with his name,

which he had often heard, immediately laid hold on his declaration at the close of this fingular account; and observing that his horses were very vicious, asked how he intended to return? " As for that matter, (replied Mr Trunnion), I am resolved to hire assedge or waggon, or such a thing as a jack-als; for I'll be d-n'd if ever I crofs the back of a horse again." " And what do you propose to do with these creatures? (faid the other, pointing to the hunters) they feem to have fome mettle; but then they are mere colts, and will take the devil and all of breaking, Methinks this hither one is shoulder slipped. "Damn them (cried the commodore) I wish both their necks were broke, thof the two cost me forty good vellow-boys." " Forty guineas! (exclaimed the stranger, who was a squire and a jocky, as well as owner of the pack) Lord! Lord! how a man may be imposed upon ! Why, these cattle are clumfy enough to go to plow; mind what a flat counter; do but observe how sharp this here one is in the whithers; then he's fired in the further fetlock." In short, this connoisseur in horse-flesh, having discovered in them all the defects which can possibly be found in that species of animals, offered to give him ten guineas for the two, faying, he would convert them into beafts of burden. The owner, who (after what had happened) was very well disposed to listen to any thing that was faid to their prejudice, implicitly believed the truth of the stranger's affeverations, discharged a surious volley of oaths against the rascal who had taken him in, and forthwith struck a bargain with the squire, who paid him instantly for his purchase; in consequence of which he won the plate at the next Canterbury races.

This affair being transacted to the mutual fatisfaction of both parties, as well as to the general entertainment of the company, who laughed in their fleeves at the dexterity of their friend, Trunnion was fet upon the fquire's own horse, and led by his fervant in the midst of this cavalcade. which proceeded to a neighbouring village, where they had bespoke dinner, and where our bridegroom found means to provide himself with another hat and wig. With regard to his marriage, he bore his disappointment with the temper of a philosopher; and the exercise he had undergone having quickened his appetite, fat down at table in the midft of his new acquaintance, making a very hearty meal, and moistening every morfel with a draught of the ale, which he found very much to his fatisfaction.

ale in gratie assister and more than the

HOLL EXPLANATION OF THE PARTY OF THE

CHAP. IX.

and other sent as her site of the state of the

He is found by the lieutenant; reconducted to his own house; married to Mrs Grizzle, who meets with a small misfortune in the night, and asserts her prerogative next morning: in consequence of which her husband's eye is endangered

MEAN while lieutenant Hatchway made thift to hobble to the church, where he informed the company of what had happened to the commodore; and the bride behaved with great decency on the occasion; for as soon as she understood the danger to which her future husband was exposed, she fainted in the arms of her sisterin-law, to the surprise of all the spectators, who could not comprehend the cause of her disorder; and when she was recovered by the application of smelling-bottles, earnestly begged that Mr. Hatchway and Tom Pipes would take her brother's coach, and go in quest of their commander.

This task they readily undertook, being escorted by all the rest of his adherents on horseback; while the bride and her friends were invited to the parson's house, and the ceremony deserred till another occasion.

The lieutenant, steering his course as near the line of direction in which Trunnion went off, as the coach-road would permit, got intelligence of his trackfromonefarm house to another; for such an apparition could not fail of attracting particular notice; and one of the horsemen having picked up his hat and wig in a bye-path, the whole troop entered the village where he was lodged, about four o'clock in the afternoon. When they understood he was fafely housed at the George, they rode up to the door in a body, and expressed their satisfaction in three chears; which were returned by the company within, as foon as they were instructed in the nature of the salute by Trunnion, who by this time had entered into all the jollity of his new friends, and was indeed more than half feas over. The lieutenant was introduced to all present as his fworn brother, and had fomething toffed up for his dinner. Tom Pipes and the crew were regaled in another room; and a fresh pair of horses being put to the coach, about fix in the evening the commodore, with all his attendants, departed for the garrison, after having shook hands with every individual in the house.

Without any farther accident, he was conveyed in fafty to his own gate before nine, and committed to the care of Pipes, who carried him instantly to his hammock, while the lieutenant was driven away to the place where the bride and her friends remained in great anxiety, which vanished when he assured them that his commodore was safe, being succeeded by abundance of mirth and pleasant-ry at the account he gave of Trunnion's adventure.

Another day was fixed for the nuptials; and, in order to baulk the curiofity of idle people, which had given great offence, the parfon was prevailed upon to perform the ceremony in the garrison, which all that day was adorned with flags and pendants difplayed, and at night illuminated by the direction of Hatchway, who also ordered the patereroes to be fired as foon as the marriage knot was tied. Neither were the other parts of the entertainment neglected by this ingenious contriver, who produced undeniable proofs of his elegance and art in the wedding fupper, which had been committed to his management and direction. This genial banquet was intirely composed of fea-dishes; a huge pillaw, confifting of a large piece of beef fliced; a couple of fowls, and half a peck of rice, smoaked in the middle of the board: a dish of hard fish swimming in oil appeared at each end, the fides being furnished with a mess of that savoury composition known by the name of lob's course, and a plate of falmagundy. The fecond course displayed a goole of a monstrous magnitude, flanked with two Guinea hens, a pig barbecu'd, an hock of falt pork in the midst of a peafe-pudding, a leg of mutton roasted with potatoes, and another boiled with yams. The third fervice was made up of a loin of fresh pork with apple-sauce, a kid smothered with onions, and a terrapin baked in the shell; and last of all, a prodigious sea-pye was presented with an infinite volume of pancakes and fritters. That every thing might be answerable to the magnificence of this delicate feast, he had provided vast quantities of strong beer, slip, rumbo, and burnt brandy, with plenty of Barbadoes water for the ladies; and hired all the siddles within fix miles, who, with the addition of a drum, bag-pipe, and Welch-harp, regaled the guests with a most melodious concert.

The company, who were not at all exceptious, feemed extremely well pleafed with every particular of the entertainment; and the evening being spent in the most social manner, the bride was by her fifter conducted to her apartment, where, however, a trifling circumstance had like to have destroyed the harmony which had been hitherto maintained.

I have already observed, that there was not one standing bed within the walls; therefore, the reader will not wonder that Mrs Trunnion was out of humour, when she found herself under the necessity of being confined with her spouse in a hammock, which tho' enlarged with a double portion of canvas, and dilated with a yoke for the occasion, was at best but a disagreeable, not to say, dangerous situation. She accordingly complained with some warmth of this inconvenience, which she imputed to disrespect, and at first absolutely resused to put up with the expedient: but Mrs Pickle soon brought her to reason and compliance, by observing that one night would soon be elapfed, and next day she might regulate her own economy.

Thus perfuaded, she ventured into the vehicle. and was vifited by her hufband in lefs than an hour, the company being departed to their own homes, and the garrison left to the command of his lieutenant and mate. But it feems the hooks that supported this swinging couch were not calculated for the addition of weight which they were now destined to bear; and, therefore, gave way in the middle of the night, to the no small terror of Mrs Trunnion, who perceiving herfelf falling, fcreamed aloud, and by that exclamation brought Hatchway with a light into the chamber. Tho' fhe had received no injury by the fall, fhe was extremely discomposed and incensed at the accident, which she even openly ascribed to the obstinacy and whimfical oddity of the commodore, in fuch petulent terms as evidently declared that she thought her great aim accomplished, and her authority secured against all the shocks of fortune. Indeed her bedfellow feemed to be of the same opinion, by his tacit refignation; for he made no reply to her infinuations, but with a most vinegar afpect crawled out of his neft, and betook himfelf to rest in another apartment, while his irritated fpouse dismissed the lieutenant, and from the wreck of the hammock made an occasional bed for herself on the floor, fully determined to provide better accommodation for next night's lodging.

Having no inclination to fleep, her thoughts during the remaining part of the night were engroffed by a scheme of reformation she was resolved to execute in the family; and no fooner did the first lark bid falutation to the morn, than starting from her humble couch, and huddling on her cloaths, the fallied from her chamber, explored her way thro' paths before unknown, and in the course of her researches perceived a large bell, to which the made fuch effectual application as alarmed every foul in the family. In a moment fhe was furrounded by Hatchway, Pipes, and all the rest of the servants half dressed; but seeing none of the feminine gender appear, the began to storm at the floth and laziness of the maids, who, she observed, ought to have been at work an hour at least before she called; and then, for the first time, understood that no women were permittedto fleep within the walls.

She did not fail to exclaim against this regulation; and being informed that the cook and chambermaid lodged in a small office-house that stood without the gate, ordered the draw-bridge to be let down, and in person beat up their quarters, commanding them forthwith to set about scouring the rooms, which had not been hitherto kept in a very decent condition, while two men were immediately employed to transport the bed, on which she used to lie, from her brother's house to her new habitation: so that, in less than two hours, the whole economy of the garrison was turned topfy-turvy, and every thing involved in tumult and noise. Trunnion being disturbed and distracted with the uproar, turned out in his shirt like a maniac, and arming himself with a cudgel of crab-tree, made an irruption into his wife's apartment, where perceiving a couple of carpenters at work, in joining a bed-stead, he, with many dreadful oaths and opprobrious invectives, ordered them to defift, fwearing, he would fuffer no bulk-heads nor burricane-houses to stand where he was mafter: but finding his remonstrances difregarded by these mechanics, who believed him to be some madman belonging to the family, who had broke from his confinement, he affaulted them both with great fury and indignation, and was handled so roughly in the encounter, that in a very short time he measured his length on the floor, in consequence of a blow that he received from a hammer, by which the fight of his remaining eye was grievoully endangered.

Having thus reduced him to a state of subjection, they resolved to secure him with cords, and were actually busy in adjusting his setters, when he was exempted from the disgrace by the accidental entrance of his spouse, who rescued him from the hands of his adversaries, and, in the midst of her condolance, imputed his missortune to the inconsiderate roughness of his own dispofition.

He breathed nothing but revenge, and made fome efforts to chastise the insolence of the workmen, who, as foon as they understood his quality, asked forgivenness for what they had done with great humility, protesting that they did not know he was master of the house. But, far from being fatisfied with this apology, he groped about for the bell, (the inflammation of his eye having utterly deprived him of fight) and the rope being, by the precaution of the delinquents, conveyed out of his reach, began to storm with incredible vociferation, like a lion roaring in the toil, pouring forth innumerable oaths and execrations, and calling by name Hatchway and Pipes, who being within hearing, obeyed the extraordinary fummons, and were ordered to put the carpenters in irons, for having audaciously affaulted him in his own house.

His myrmidons feeing he had been evil-intreated, were exasperated at the assault he had suffered, which they considered as an affront upon the dignity of the garrison: the more so, as the mutineers seemed to put themselves in a posture of defence, and set their authority at desiance: they therefore, unsheathed their cutlasses, which they commonly wore as badges of their commission; and a desperate engagement, in all probability, would have ensued, had not the lady of the castle interposed, and prevented the effects of their animosity, by assuring thelieutenant that the commodore had been the aggressor; and that the workmen, finding themselves attacked in such an extraordinary manner, by a person whom they did not know, were obliged to act in their own defence, by which he had received that unlucky contusion.

Mr Hatchway no fooner learnt the fentiments of Mrs Trunnion, than sheathing his indignation, he told the commodore he should always be ready to execute his lawful commands; but that he could not in conscience be concerned in oppressing poor people who had been guilty of no offence.

This unexpected declaration, together with the behaviour of his wife, who in his hearing, defired the carpenters to resume their work, filled the breaft of Trunnion with rage and mortification. He pulled off his woolen night-cap, pummelled his bare pate, beat the floor alternately with his feet, swore his people had betrayed him, and curfed himfelf to the lowest pit of hell, for having admitted fuch a cockatrice into his But all these exclamations did not avail; they were among the last essays of his resistance to the will of his wife, whose influence among his adherents had already fwallowed up his own; and who now peremptorily told him, that he must leave the management of every thing within doors to her, who understood best what was for his honour and advantage. She then ordered a poultice to be prepared for his eye, which being applied, he was committed to the care of Pipes, by whom he was led about the house like a blind bear growling for prey, while his induftrious yoke fellow executed every circumstance of the plan she had projected; so that, when he recovered his vision, he was an utter stranger in his own house.

CHAP. X.

The commodore being in some cases restive, his lady has recourse to artifice in the establishment of her throne; she exhibits symptoms of pregnancy, to the unspeakable joy of Trunnion, who nevertheless is baulked in his expectation.

THESE innovations were not effected without many loud objections on his part; and divers curious dialogues passed between him and his yoke-fellow, who always came off victorious from the dispute; insomuch that his countenance gradually fell; he began to suppress, and at length entirely devoured his chagrin; the terrors of superior authority were plainly perceivable in his features, and in less than three months he became a thorough-paced husband. Not that his obstinacy were extinguished, though overcome: in fome things he was as inflexible and mulish as ever, but then he durst not kick so openly, and was reduced to the necessity of being paffive in his refentments. Mrs Trunnion, for example, proposed that a coach and fix should be purchased, as the could not ride on horseback, and the chaife was a fcandalous carriage for a person of her condition; the commodore, conscious of his own inferior capacity in point of reasoning, did not think proper to dispute the proposal, but lent a deaf ear to her repeated remonstrances, though they were enforced with every argument which she thought could footh, terrify, shame or decoy him into compliance; in vain did she urge the excess of affection she had for him, as meriting some return of tenderness and condescension; he was even proof against certain menacing hints she gave, touching the refentment of a flighted woman; and he flood out against all the considerations of dignity or disgrace, like a bulwark of brass. Neither was he moved to any indecent or unkind expressions of contradiction, even when she upbraided him with his fordid disposition, and put him in mind of the fortune and honour he had acquired by his marriage, but feemed to retire within himfelf, like a tortoife when attacked, that shrinks within its shell, and silently endured the scourge of her reproaches, without feeming fensible of the fmart.

This, however, was the only point in which the had been baffled fince her nuptials; and as the could by no means digest the miscarriage, the tortured her invention for some new plan by which she might augment her influence and authority: what her genius refused, was supplied by accident; for she had not lived four months in the garrison, when she was seized with frequent qualms and reachings, her breasts began to harden, and her stomach to be remarkably prominent: in a word, she congratulated herself on the symptoms of her own fertility, and the commodore was transported with joy at the profpect of an heir of his own begetting.

She knew this was the proper feafon for vindicating her own fovereignty, and accordingly employed the means which nature had put in her There was not a rare piece of furniture and apparel for which she did not long; and one day as she went to church, feeing lady Stately's equipage arrive, the fuddenly fainted away. Her husband, whose vanity had never been so perfeetly gratified as with this promifed harvest of his own fowing, took the alarm immediately, and in order to prevent relapfes of that kind, which might be attended with fatal confequences to his hope, gave her leave to befpeak a coach, horses and liveries to her own liking. Thus authorized, she in a very little time exhibited such a specimen of her own taste and magnificence, as afforded speculation to the whole county, and made Trunnion's heart quake within him, because he foresaw no limits to her extravagance, which also manifested itself in the most expensive preparations for her lying in.

Her pride, which had hitherto regarded the representative of her father's house, seemed now to lose all that hereditary respect, and prompt her to outshine and undervalue the elder branch of her family. She behaved to Mrs Pickle with a fort of civil referve that implied a conscious superiority, and an emulation in point of grandeur immediately commenced between the two fifters. She every day communicated her importance to the whole parish, under pretence of taking the air in her coach, and endeavoured to extend her acquaintance among people of fashion. Nor was this an undertaking attended with great difficulty, for all persons whatever, capable of maintaining a certain appearance, will always find admission into what is called the best company, and be rated in point of character according to their own valuation, without subjecting their pretensions to the smallest doubt or examination. visits and parties the feized every opportunity of declaring her present condition, observing that The was forbid by her physicians to taste such a pickle, and that fuch a dish was poison to a woman in her way: nay, where she was on a footing of familiarity, the affected to make wry faces, and complained that the young rogue began to be very unruly, writhing herfelf into divers contortions, as if she had been grievously incommoded by the mettle of this future Trunnion. husband himself did not behave with all the moderation that might have been expected; at the club he frequently mentioned this circumstance of his own vigour as a pretty fuccessful feat to be performed by an old fellow of fifty-five, and confirmed the opinion of his strength by redoubled squeezes of the landlord's hand, which never failed of extorting a satisfactory certificate of his might. When his companions drank to the Hans en kelder, or Jack in the low cellar, he could not help displaying an extraordinary complacence of countenance, and signified his intention of sending the young dog to sea, as soon as he should be able to carry a cartridge, in hopes of seeing him an officer before his own death.

Vol. I.

This hope helped to confole him under the extraordinary expence to which he was exposed by the profusion of his wife, especially when he confidered that his compliance with her prodigality would be limited to the expiration of the nine months, of which the best part was by this time elapsed; yet, in spite of all this philosophical refignation, her fancy fometimes foared to fuch a ridiculous and intolerable pitch of infolence and absurdity, that his temper forfook him, and he could not help wishing in secret, that her pride might be confounded in the diffipation of her most flattering hopes, even though he himself should be a principal sufferer by the disappoint-Thefe, however, were no other than the fuggestions of temporary difgusts, that commonly fubfided as fuddenly as they arose, and never gave the least disturbance to the person who infpired them, because he took care to conceal them carefully from her knowledge.

Meanwhile she happily advanced in her reckoning, with the promise of a favourable issue; the term of her computation expired, and in the middle of the night she was visited by certain warnings that seemed to be speak the approach of the critical moment. The commodore got up with great alacrity, and called the midwise, who had been several days in the house; the gossips were immediately summoned, and the most interesting expectations prevailed; but the symptoms of labour gradually vanished, and, as the matrons sagely observed, this was no more than a salse alarm.

Two nights after, they received a fecond intimation, and as she was sensibly diminished in the waist, every thing was supposed to be in a fair way; yet this vifitation was not more conclusive than the former; her pains wore off in spite of all her endeavours to encourage them, and the good women betook themselves to their respective homes, in expectation of finding the third attack decifive, alluding to the well known maxim, that number three is always fortunate. once, however, this apothegm failed; the next call was altogether as ineffectual as the former; and moreover, attended with a phænomenon which to them was equally strange and inexplicable: this was no other than fuch a reduction in the fize of Mrs Trunnion as might have been expected after the birth of a full-grown child. Startled at fuch an unaccountable event, they fat in close divan; and concluding that the case was in all respects unnatural and prodigious, defired that a messenger might be immediately dispatched for some male practitioner in the art of midwifery.

The commodore, without guessing the cause of their perplexity, ordered Pipes immediately on this piece of duty; and in less than two hours they were assisted by the advice of a surgeon of the neighbourhood, who boldly assirmed that the patient had never been with child. This asseveration was like a clap of thunder to Mr Trunnion, who had been during eight whole days and nights in continual expectation of being hailed with the appellation of father.

After some recollection, he swore the surgeon was an ignorant fellow, and that he would not take his word for what he advanced; being comforted and confirmed in his want of faith by the infinuations of the midwife, who still perfisted to feed Mrs Trunnion with hopes of a speedy and fafe delivery; observing that she had been concerned in many a case of the same nature, where a fine child was found, even after all figns of the mother's pregnancy had disappeared. Every twig of hope, how flender foever it may be, is eagerly caught hold on by people who find themselves in danger of being disappointed. To every question proposed by her to the lady with the preamble of "Han't you?" or "Don't you?" an answer was made in the affirmative, whether agreeable to find in her heart to disown any symptom that might favour the notion she had so long indulged.

This experienced proficient in the obstetric art was, therefore, kept in close attendance for the space of three weeks, during which the patient had feveral returns of what she pleased herself with believing to be labour pains, till at length the and her husband became the standing joke of the parish; and this infatuated couple could scarce be prevailed upon to part with their hopes, even when she appeared as lank as a greyhound, and they were furnished with other unquestionable proofs of their having been deceived. But they could not for ever remain under the influence of this sweet delusion, which at last faded away, and was succeeded by a paroxism of shame and confusion, that kept the husband within doors for the space of a whole fortnight, and confined his lady to her bed for a feries of weeks, during which she suffered all the anguish of the most intense mortification; yet even this was subdued by the lenient hand of time.

The first respite from her chagrin was employed in the strict discharge of what are called the duties of religion, which she performed with the most rancorous severity, setting on foot a persecution in her own family, that made the house too hot for all the menial servants, even russed the almost invincible indisserence of Tom Pipes, harassed the commodore himself out of all patients.

ence, and spared no individual but lieutenant Hatchway, whom she never ventured to disoblige.

CHAP. XI.

Mrs Trunnion erects atyranny in the garrison, while her husband conceives an affection for his nephew Perry, who manifests a peculiarity of disposition even in his tender years.

AVING exercised herself three months in fuch pious amusements, sheappeared again in the world; but her misfortune had made fuch an impression on her mind, that she could not bear the fight of a child, and trembled whenever the conversation happened to turn upon a christening. Her temper, which was naturally none of the sweetest, seemed to have imbibed a double proportion of fouring from her disappointment; of confequence her company was not much coveted, and she found very few people disposed to treat her with those marks of consideration which the looked upon as her due. This neglect detached her from the fociety of an unmannerly world; she concentred the energy of all her talents in the government of her own house, which groaned accordingly under her arbitrary fway, and in the brandy-bottle found ample confolation for all the affliction the had undergone.

As for the commodore, he in a little time weathered his difgrace, after having fustained many fevere jokes from the lieutenant; and now his chief aim being to be absent from his own house as much as possible, he frequented the public-house more than ever, more assiduously cultivated the friendship of his brother-in-law Mr Pickle, and in the course of their intimacy conceived an affection for his nephew Perry, which did not end but with his life. Indeed it must be owned that Trunnion was not naturally deficient in the focial passions of the foul, which, though they were strangely warped, disguised and overborne by the circumstances of his boisterous life and education, did not fail to manifest themselves occasionally through the whole course of his behaviour.

As all hopes of propagating his own name had perished, and his relations lay under the interdiction of his hate, it is no wonder that through the familiarity and friendly intercourse subsisting between him and Mr Gamaliel, he contracted a liking for the boy, who by this time entered the third year of his age, and was indeed a very hand-some, healthy and promising child; and what seemed to ingratiate him still more with his uncle, was a certain oddity of disposition for which he had been remarkable even from his cradle. It is reported of him, that before the first year of his infancy was elapsed, he used very often, immediately after being dressed, in the midst of the ca-reffes which were bestowed upon him by his mother, while she indulged herself in the contemplation of her own happiness, all of a sudden to alarm her with a fit of shrieks and cries, which continued with great violence till he was stripped to the skin with the utmost expedition by order of his affrighted parent, who thought his tender body was tormented by the misapplication of some unlucky pin; and when he had given them all this disturbance and unnecessary trouble, he would lie sprawling and laughing in their faces as if he ridiculed the impertinence of their concern. Nay, it is affirmed, that one day, when an old woman who attended in the nursery had by stealth conveyed a bottle of cordial waters to her mouth, he pulled his nurse by the sleeve, and by a slight glance detecting the theft, tipt her the wink with a particular flyness of countenance, as if he had faid with a fneer, " Ay, ay, that is what you must all come to." But these instances of reslection in a babe nine months old are so incredible, that I look upon them as ex post facto observations, founded upon imaginary recollection, when he was in a more advanced age, and his peculiarities of temper became much more remarkable; of a piece with the ingenious discoveries of those fagacious observers, who can discern something evidently characteristic in the features of any noted personage whose character they have previoufly heard explained, yet, without pretending to specify at what period of his childhood this singularity first appeared, I can with great truth declare, that when he first attracted the notice and affection of his uncle, it was plainly perceivable.

One would imagine he had marked out the commodore as a proper object of ridicule, for almost all his little childish satire was levelled against I will not deny that he might have been influenced in this particular by the example and instruction of Mr Hatchway, who delighted in fuperintending the first effays of his genius. As the gout had taken up its residence in Mr Trunnion's great toe, from whence it never removed, no not for a day, little Perry took great pleasure in treading by accident on this infirm member; and when his uncle, incenfed by the pain, ufed to damn him for a hell-begotten brat, he would appeale him in a twinkling by returning the curse with equal emphasis, and asking what was the matter with old Hannibal Tough? an appellation by which the lieutenant had taught him to diftinguish this grim commander.

Neither was this the only experiment he tried upon the patience of the commodore, with whose nose he used to take indecent freedoms even while he was fondled on his knee; in one month he put him to the expence of two guineas in seal-skin, by picking his pocket of divers tobacco pouches, all of which he in secret committed to the slames. Nor did the caprice of his disposition abstain from the savourite beverage of Trunnion, who more than once swallowed a whole draught in which his brother's snuff-box had been emptied, before he perceived the disagreeable infusion: and one day, when the commodore had chastised him by a gentle tap with his cane, he sell flat on the floor as if he had been deprived of all sense and motion, to the terror and amazement of the striker; and after having filled the whole house with consusion and dismay, opened his eyes and laughed heartily at the success of his own imposition.

It would be an endless and perhaps no very agreeable talk, to enumerate all the unlucky pranks he played upon his uncle and others, before he attained the fourth year of his age; about which time he was fent, with an attendant, to a dayschool in the neighbourhood, that (to use his good mother's own expression) he might be out of harm's way. Here, however, he made little progress, except in mischief, which he practifed with impunity, because the school-mistress would run no risk of disobliging a lady of fortune, by exercifing unnecessary feverities upon her only Nevertheless Mrs Pickle was not so blindly partial as to be pleafed with fuch unfeafonable indulgence. Perry was taken out of the hands of this courteous teacher, and committed to the instruction of a pedagogue, who was ordered to administer such correction as the boy should in his opinion deserve. This authority he did not neglect to use; his pupil was regularly slogged twice a day, and after having been subjected to this course of discipline for the space of eighteen months, declared the most obstinate dull and untoward genius that ever had fallen under his cultivation; instead of being reformed, he feemed rather hardened and confirmed in his vicious inclinations, and was dead to all fense of fear as well as shame. His mother was extremely mortified at these symptoms of stupidity, which she confidered as an inheritance derived from the spirit of his father, and consequently insurmountable by all the efforts of human care. But the commodore rejoiced over the ruggedness of his nature, and was particularly pleafed when upon inquiry he found that Perry had beaten all the boys in the school; a circumstance from which he prognosticated every thing that was fair and fortunate in his future fate; observing, that, at his age, he himfelf was just fuch another. boy, who was now turned of fix, having profited fo little under the birch of his unsparing governor, Mrs Pickle was counfelled to fend him to a boarding school not far from London, which was kept by a certain person very eminent for his fuccessful method of education. This advice she the more readily embraced, because at that time she found herself pretty far gone with another child, that she hoped would console her for the disappointment she had met with in the unpromifing talents of Perry, or at any rate divide her concern, fo as to enable her to endure the absence of either.

CHAP. XII.

Peregrine is fent to a boarding-school, becomes remarkable for his genius and ambition.

THE commodore understanding her determination, to which her husband did not venture to make the least objection, interested himfelf so much in behalf of his favourite, as to sit him out at his own charge, and accompany him in person to the place of his destination; where he desrayed the expence of his entrance; and lest him to the particular care and inspection of the usher, who having been recommended to him as a person of parts and integrity, received per advance a handsome consideration for the task he undertook.

Nothing could be better judged than this piece of liberality; the affiftant was actually a man of learning, probity and good sense; and though obliged by the scandalous administration of fortune to act in the character of an inferior teacher, had, by his sole capacity and application, brought the school to that degree of reputation which it never could have obtained from the talents of his superior. He had established an economy, which, though regular, was not at all severe, by enacting a body of laws suited to the age and comprehension of every individual; and each transgressor was fairly tried by his peers, and punished according to the verdict of the jury. No boy was scourged for want of apprehension, but a spirit of emulation was raised by well-timed praise and artful comparison, and maintained by a distribution of small prizes. which were adjudged to those who fignalized themselves either by their industry, sobriety or genius. This tutor, whose name was Jennings, began with Perry, according to his constant maxim, by examining the foil; that is, studying his temper, in order to confult the bias of his disposition, which was strangely perverted by the absurd discipline he had undergone. He found him in a state of fullen infensibility, which the child had gradually contracted in a long course of stupifying correction; and at first he was not in the least actuated by that commendation which animated the rest of his school-fellows; nor was it in the power of reproach to excite his ambition. which had been buried, as it were, in the grave of difgrace; the usher, therefore, had recourse to contemptuous neglect, with which he affected to treat this stubborn spirit; foreseeing, that if he retained any feeds of fentiment, this weather would infallibly raife them into vegetation: this judgment was justified by the event; the boy in a little time began to make observations; he perceived the marks of distinction with which virtue was rewarded, grew ashamed of the despicable figure he himself made among his companions, who far from courting, rather shunned his conversation; and actually pined at his own want of importance.

Mr Jennings faw and rejoiced at his mortification, which he fuffered to proceed as far as poffible, without endangering his health. child loft all relish for diversion, loathed his food, grew pensive, solitary, and was frequently found weeping by himself. These symptoms plainly evinced the recovery of his feelings, to which his governor thought it now high time to make application: and, therefore, by little and little altered his behaviour from the indifference he had put on, to the appearance of more regard and attention. This produced a favourable change in the boy, whose eyes sparkled with satisfaction one day, when his master expressed himself with. a shew of surprise in these words, "So, Perry! I find you don't want genius, when you think proper to use it." Such encomiums kindled the spirit of emulation in his little breast: he exerted himself with surprising alacrity, by which he foon acquitted himself of the imputation of dullness, and obtained fundry honorary filver pennies, as acknowledgements of his application: his school-fellows now solicited his friendship as eagerly as they had avoided it before; and in less than a twelvemonth after his arrival, this supposed dunce was remarkable for the brightness of his parts; having in that short period learnt to read English perfectly well, made great progress in writing, enabled himself to speak the French language without hesitation, and acquired some knowledge in the Rudiments of the Latin tongue. The usher did not fail to transmit an account of his proficiency to the commodore, who received it with transport, and forthwith communicated the happy tidings to the parents.

Mr Gamaliel Pickle, who was never fubject to violentemotions, heard them with a fort of phlegmatic fatisfaction that scarce manifested itself either in his countenance or expressions; nor did the child's mother break forth into that rapture and admiration which might have been expected, when she understood how much the talents of her firstborn had exceeded the hope of her warmest imagination. Not but that she professed herself well pleased with Perry's reputation; though she obferved, that, in these commendations, the truth was always exaggerated by school-masters, for their own interest; and presended to wonder that the usher had not mingled more probability with his praise. Trunnion was offended at her indifference and want of faith, and believing that she refined too much in her discernment, swore that Jennings had declared the truth, and nothing but the truth; for he himfelf had prophecied from the beginning that the boy would turn out a credit to his family. But by this time Mrs Pickle was bleffed with a daughter, whom she had brought into the world about six months before the intelligence arrived; fo that her care and affection being otherwise engrossed, the praise of Perry was the less greedily devoured. The abatement of her fondness was an advantage to his education, which would have been retarded, and perhaps ruined by pernicious indulgence and preposterous interposition, had her love considered him as an only child; whereas her concern being now diverted to another object that shared, at: leaft, one half of her affection, he was left to the management of his preceptor, who tutored him according to his own plan, without any let or interruption. Indeed, all his fagacity and circumfpection were but barely sufficient to keep the young gentleman in order; for now that he had won the palm of victory from his rivals in point of scholarship, his ambition dilated, and he was feized with a defire of fubjecting the whole school by the valour of his arm. Before he could bring his project to bear, innumberable battles were fought with various fuccess; every day a bloody noise and complaint were presented against him, and his own vifage commonly bore some livid marks of obstinate contention. At length, however, he accomplished his aim; his adversaries were fubdued, his prowefs acknowledged, and he obtained the laurel in war as well as in wit. Thus triumphant, he was intoxicated with fuccess. His pride rose in proportion to his power, and in spite of all the endeavours of Jennings, who practifed every method he could invent for curbing his licentious conduct, without depressing his spirit, he contracted a large proportion of insolence, which a series of missortunes that happened to him in the sequel could scarce effectually tame. Nevertheless there was a fund of good nature and generosity in his composition; and though he established a tyranny among his comerades, the tranquillity of his reign was maintained by the love rather than by the sear of his subjects.

In the midst of all this enjoyment of empire, he never once violated that respectful awe with which the usher had found means to inspire him ; but he by no means preferved the fame regard for the principal master, an old illiterate German quack, who had formerly practifed corn-cutting among the quality, and fold cofmetic washes to the ladies, together with teeth powders, hairdying liquors, prolifick elixirs, and tinctures to sweeten the breath. These nostrums, recommended by the art of cringing, in which he was confummate, ingratiated him fo much with people of fashion, that he was enabled to set up school with five and twenty boys of the best families, whom he boarded on his own terms, and undertook to instruct in the French and Latin languages, fo as to qualify them for the colleges of Westminster and Eaton. While this plan was in its infancy, he was fo fortunate as to meet with Jennings, who for the paultry confideration of thirty pounds a year, which his necessities compelled him to accept, took the whole trouble of educating the children upon himself, contrived an excellent system for that purpose, and by his assiduity and knowledge, executed all the particulars to the entire satisfaction of those concerned, who, by-the-bye never inquired into his qualifications, but suffered the other to enjoy the fruits of his labour and ingenuity.

Over and above a large stock of avarice, ignorance and vanity, this fuperior had certain ridiculous peculiarities in his person, such as a hunch upon his back, and difforted limbs, that feemed to attract the fatyrical notice of Peregrine, who, young as he was, took offence at his want of reverence for his usher, over whom he sometimes chose opportunities of displaying his authority, that the boys might not displace their veneration. Mr Keypstick, therefore, such as I have described him, incurred the contempt and displeasure of this enterprising pupil, who now being in the tenth year of his age, had capacity enough to give him abundance of vexation. He underwent many mortifying jokes from the invention of Pickle and his confederates; fo that he began to entertain suspicion of Mr Jennings, who he could not help thinking had been at the bottom of them all, and spirited up principles of rebellion in the school, with a view of making himself indepen-Possessed with this chimera, which was void of all foundation, the German descended so low as to tamper in private with the boys, from whom he hoped to draw some very important discovery; but he was disappointed in his expectation: and this mean practice reaching the ears of his usher, he voluntarily resigned his employment. Finding interest to obtain holy orders, in a little time after he left the kingdom, hoping to find a settlement in some of our American plantations.

The departure of Mr Jennings produced a great revolution in the affairs of Keypstick, which declined from that moment, because he had neither authority to enforce obedience, nor prudence to maintain order among his scholars; so that the school degenerated into anarchy and confusion, and he himself dwindled in the opinion of his employers, who looked upon him as superannuated, and withdrew their children from his tuition.

Peregrine seeing this dissolution of their society, and finding himself every day deprived of some companion, began to repine at his situation, and resolved, if possible, to procure his release from the jurisdiction of the person whom he both detested and despised. With this view he went to work and composed the following billet, addressed to the commodore, which was the first specimen of his composition in the epistolary way.

Honoured and loving uncle,

HOping you are in good health, this serves to inform you, that Mr Jennings is gone, and Mr Keypstick will never meet with his fellow. The school is already almost broke up, and the rest daily going away; and I beg of you of all love to have me fetched away also, for I cannot bear to be any longer under one who is a perfect ignoramus, who scarce knows the declination of musa, and is more sit to be a scar-crow than a school-master; hoping you will send for me soon, with my love to my aunt, and my duty to my honoured parents, craving their blessing and yours. And this is all at present from, honoured uncle, your well-beloved and dutiful nephew and godson, and humble servant to command 'till death,

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

Trunnion was overjoyed at the receipt of this letter, which he looked upon as one of the greatest efforts of human genius, and as fuch communicated the contents to his lady, whom he had disturbed for the purpose in the middle of her devotion, by fending a meffage to her closet, whither it was her custom very frequently to retire. She was out of humour at being interrupted, and, therefore, did not peruse this specimen of her nephew's understanding with all the relish that the commodore himself had enjoyed; on the contrary, after fundry paralytical endeavours to speak, (for her tongue sometimes refused its office) she observed that the boy was a pert jackanipes, and deserved to be severely chastised for treating his betters with fuch difrespect. Her husband undertook his godson's desence, reprefenting with great warmth that he knew Keypstick to be a good for nothing pimping old rascal, and that Perry shewed a great deal of spirit and good sense in desiring to be taken from under his command; he, therefore, declared that the boy should not live a week longer with such a shambling son of a bitch, and sanctioned his declaration with abundance of oaths.

Mrs Trunnion, composing her countenance into a look of religious demureness, rebuked him for his profane way of talking; and asked in a magisterial tone, if he intended never to lay aside that brutal behaviour? Irritated at this reproach, he answered in terms of indignation, that he knew how to behave himself as well as e'er a woman that wore a head, bade her mind her own affairs, and with another repetition of oaths, gave her to understand that he would be master in his own house.

This infinuation operated upon her spirits like friction upon a glass globe; her face gleamed with resentment, and every pore seemed to emit particles of slame. She replied with incredible sluency of the bitterest expressions. He retorted equal rage in broken hints and incoherent imprecations. She rejoined with redoubled fury, and in conclusion he was fain to betake himself to slight, ejaculating curses against her; and muttering something concerning the brandy-bottle, which, however, he took care should never reach her ears.

From his own house he went directly to visit Mrs Pickle, to whom he imparted Peregrine's epistle with many encomiums upon the boy's promising parts; and finding his commendations but coldly received, desired she would permit him to take his godson under his own care.

This lady, whose family was now increased by another son who seemed to ingross her care for the present, had not seen Perry during a course of sour years, and with regard to him, was persectly weared of that infirmity known by the name of maternal fondness; she, therefore, consented to the commodore's request with great condescension, and a polite compliment to him on the concern he had all along manifested for the welfare of the child.

CHAP. XIII.

The commodore takes Peregrine under his own care.

The boy arrives at the garrison;—is strangely received by his own mother;—enters into a confederacy with Hatchway and Pipes, and executes a couple of waggish enterprises upon his aunt.

Runnion, having obtained this permission, that very afternoon dispatched the lieutenant in a post-chaise to Keypstick's house, from whence in two days he returned with our young hero; who being now in the eleventh year of his age, had outgrown the expectation of all his family, and was remarkable for the beauty and elegance of his person. His god-father was transported at his arrival, as if he had been actually the issue of his own loins. He shook him heartily by the hand, turned him round and round, furveyed him from top to bottom, bade Hatchway take notice how handsomely he was built; squeezed his hand again, faying, " Damn ye, you dog, I suppose you don't value such an old crazy son of a bitch as me, a rope's end. You have forgot how I wont to dandle you on my knee, when you was a little urchan no bigger than the Davit, and played a thousand tricks upon me, burning my bacco-pouches and poisoning my rumbo: O! damn ye, you can grin fast enough I see; I warrant you have learnt more things than writing and the Latin lingo." Even Tom Pipes expreffed uncommon fatisfaction on this joyful occafion; and coming up to Perry, thrust forth his fore paw, and accosted him with the salutation of "What chear, my young master? I am glad to fee thee with all my heart." These compliments being passed, his uncle halted to the door of his wife's chamber, at which he stood hollowing, " Here's your kinsman Perry, belike yon won't come and bid him welcome." " Lord! Mr Trunnion, faid fhe, why will you continually harafs me in this manner with your impertinent intrusion!" " I harrow you, replied the commodore; 'sblood! I believe your upper works are damaged, I only came to inform you that here was your cousin, whom you have not seen these four long years; and I'll be damned if there is fuch another of his age within the king's dominions, d'ye fee, either for make or mettle; he's a credit to the name, d'ye fee, but damn my eyes l'Il fay no more of the matter; If you come you may, if you won't you may let it alone." "Well, I won't come then (answered his yoke-fellow) for I am at present more agreeably employed." "Oho! you are? I believe fo too;" cried the commodore, making wry faces and mimicking the action of dramdrinking. Then addressing himself to Hatchway, " Prithee Jack, (faid he) go and try thy skill on that flubborn hulk; if any body can bring her about I know you wool" The lieutenant accordingly taking his station at the door, conveyed his persuasion in these words, " What won't you turn out and hail little Perry? It will do your heart good to fee fuch a handfome young dog; I'm fure he is the very moral of you, and as like, as if he had been spit out of your own mouth, as the faying is; do shew a little respect for your kinsman, can't you?" To this remonstrance she replied in a mild tone of voice, " Dear Mr Hatchway, you are always teazing one in such a manner; fure I am, no body can tax me with unkindness, or want of natural affection;" fo faying. the opened the door, and advancing to the hall where her nephew stood, received him very graciously, and observed that he was the very image of her papa.

VOL. I.

In the afternoon he was conducted by the commodore to the house of his parents; and strange to tell, no sooner was he presented to his mother than her countenance changed, she eyed him with tokens of affliction and furprife, and burfting into tears, exclaimed her child was dead. and this was no other than an imposture whom they had brought to defraud her forrow. Trunnion was confounded at this unaccountable paffion, which had no other foundation than caprice and whim; and Gamaliel himself so disconcerted and unfettled in his own belief, which began to waver, that he knew not how to behave towards the boy, whom his godfather immediately carried back to the garrison, swearing all the way that Perry should never cross their threshold again with his good-will. Nay, fo much was he incenfed at this unnatural and abfurd renunciation, that he refused to carry on any further correfpondence with Pickle, until he was appealed by his folicitations and fubmission, and Peregrine owned as his fon and heir. But this acknowledgment was made without the privity of his wife, whose vicious aversion he was obliged, in appearance to adopt. Thus exiled from his father's house, the young gentleman was left entirely to the disposal of the commodore, whose affection for him daily increased, insomuch that he could scarce prevail upon himself to part with him, when his education abfolutely required that he should be otherwise disposed of.

In all probability, this extraordinary attachment was, if not produced, at least riveted by that peculiar turn in Peregrine's imagination, which we have already observed; and which, during his residence in the castle, appeared in sundry stratagems he practised upon his uncle and aunt, under the auspices of Mr Hatchway, who assisted him in the contrivance and execution of all his schemes. Nor was Pipes exempted from a share in their undertakings; for, being a trusty fellow, not without dexterity in some cases, and altogether resigned to their will, they sound him a serviceable instrument for their purpose, and used him accordingly.

The first sample of their art was exhibited upon Mrs Trunnion. They terrified that good lady with strange noises when she retired to her devotion. Pipes was a natural genius in the compolition of discords; he could imitate the founds produced by the winding of a jack, the filing of a faw, and the swinging of a malefactor hanging in chains; he could counterfeit the braying of an ass, the screeching of a night owl, the caterwauling of cats, the howling of a dog, the fqueaking of a pig, the crowing of a cock; and he had learned the war-hoop uttered by the Indians in North America. These talents were exerted fuccesfively at different times and places, to the terror of Mrs Trunnion, the discomposure of the commodore himfelf, and the consternation of all the servants in the castle. Peregrine, with a theet over his cloaths, fometimes tumbled before his aunt in the twilight, when her organs of vifion were a little impaired by the cordial she had fwallowed; and the boatfwain's mate taught him to shoe cats with walnut shells, fo that they made a most dreadful clattering in their nocturnal excursions. The mind of Mrs Trunnion was not a little disturbed by these alarms, which, in her opinion, portended the death of some principal person in the family; she redoubled her religious exercises, and fortified her spirits with fresh potations; nay, she began to take notice that Mr Trunnion's constitution was very much broke. and feemed diffatisfied when people observed that they never faw him look better. Her frequent vifits to the closet, where all her consolation was deposited, inspired the confederates with advice which had like to have been attended with tragical confequences. They found an opportunity to infuse jallap in one of her case bottles, and the took fo largely of this medicine, that her constitution had well nigh funk under the violence of its effect. She suffered a succession of fainting fits that reduced her to the brink of the grave, in spite of all the remedies that were adminiftred by a phyfician who was called in the beginning of her disorder. After having examined the symptoms, he declared that the patient had been poisoned with arfenic, and prescribed oily draughts and lubricating injections to defend the coats of the stomach and intestines from the vellicating particles of that pernicious mineral; at the same time, hinting with a look of infinite fagacity, that it was not difficult to divine the whole mystery. He affected to deplore the poor lady, as if she was exposed to more attempts of the same nature; thereby glancing obliquely at the innocent commodore, whom the officious fon of Æsculapious suspected as the author of this expedient, to rid his hands of a yoke-fellow for whom he was well known to have no great devotion. This impertinent and malicious infinuation made fome impression upon the by-standers, and furnished ample field for slander, to afperse the morals of Trunnion, who was reprefented through the whole district as a monster of barbarity. Nay, the sufferer herself, though the behaved with great decency and prudence, could not help entertaining fome fmall diffidence of her husband, not that she imagined he had any design upon her life, but that he had been at pains to adulterate the brandy with a view of detaching her from that favourite liquor.

On this supposition, she resolved to act with more caution for the suture, without setting on soot any inquiry about the affair; while the commodore imputing her indisposition to some natural cause, after the danger was past, never bestowed a thought upon the subject; so that the perpetrators were quit of their fear, which, however, had punished them so effectually, that they never would hazard any more jokes of the fame

The shafts of their wit were now directed against the commander himself, whom they teized and terrified almost out of his fenses. One day while he was at dinner, Pipes came and told him that there was a person below that wanted to fpeak with him immediately about an affair of the greatest importance, that would admit of no delay; upon which he ordered the Aranger to be told that he was engaged, and that he must fend up his name and business. To this demand he received for answer a message, importing that the person's name was unknown to him, and his business of such a nature, that it could not be disclosed to any one but the commodore himself. whom he earnestly defired to see without loss of time.

Trunnion, surprised at this importunity, got up with great reluctance in the middle of his meal, and descending to a parlour where the stranger was, asked in a surly tone, what he wanted with him in such a damned hurry, that he could not wait till he had made an end of his mess. The other, not at all disconcerted at this rough address, advanced close up to him on his tiptoes, and with a look of considence and conceit, laying his mouth to one side of the commodore's head, whispered softly to his ear, "Sir, I am the attorney whom you wanted to converse with in private." "The attorney! (cried Trunnion, staring and half choacked with choler). Yes, Sir, at your service, replied this retainer to the law; and if you please, the sooner we dispatch the affair the better; for 'tis an old observation, that delay breeds danger." "Truly, brother, (said the commodore, who could no longer contain himself,) I do confess that I am very much of your way of thinking, d'ye see; and, therefore, you shall be dispatched in a trace;" so saying, he listed up his walking staff, which was something between a crutch and a cudgel, and discharged it with such energy on the seat of the attorney's understanding, that if there had been any thing but solid bone, the contents of his skull must have been evacuated.

Fortified as he was by nature against all such affaults, he could not withstand the momentum of the blow, which in an instant laid him slat on the sloor, deprived of all sense and motion; and Trunnion hopped up stairs to dinner, applauding himself in ejaculations all the way for the vengeance he had taken on such an impudent pettisogging miscreant.

The attorney no sooner awaked from his trance, into which he had been so unexpectedly lulled, than he east his eyes around in quest of evidence, by which he might be enabled the more easily to prove the injury he had sustained; but not a soul appearing, he made shift to get upon his legs again, and with the blood trickling over his nose, sollowed one of the servants into the dinning-room, resolved to come to an explanation with the affailant, and either extort money from him by way of fatisfaction, or provoke him to a fecond application before witnesses. With this view he entered the room in a peal of clamour, to the amazement of all present, and the terror of Mrs Trunnion, who shrieked at the appearance of fuch a spectacle; and addressing himself to the commodore, " I'll tell you what, Sir, faid he, if there be law in England, I'll make you fmart for this here affault; you think you have screened yourfelf from a profecution, by fending all your fervants out of the way, but that circumstance will appear upon trial to be a plain proof of the malice propense with which the fact was committed: especially when corroborated by the evidence of this here letter under your own hand, whereby I am defired to come to your own house to transact an affair of consequence; so saying, he produced the writing, and read the contents in these words.

Mr ROGER RAVINE,

Sir,

BEING in a manner prisoner in my own house, I desire you will give me a call precisely at three o'clock in the afternoon, and insist upon seeing myself, as I have an affair of great consequence, in which your particular advice is wanted by your humble servant,

HAWSER TRUNNION.

The one-eyed commander, who had been fatisfied with the chastisement he had already bestowed upon the plaintiff, hearing him read this audacious piece of forgery, which he confidered as the effect of his own villany, started up from table, and feizing a huge turkey that lay in a dish before him, would have applied it sauce and all by way of poultice to his wound, had he not been restrained by Hatchway, who laid fast hold on both his arms, and fixed him to his chair again, advising the attorney to sheer off with what he had got. Far from following this falutary counsel, he redoubled his threats, and fet Trunnion at defiance, telling him he was not a man of true courage, although he had commanded a ship of war, or else he would not have attacked any person in such a cowardly and clandestine manner. This povocation would have answered his purpose effectually, had not his adverfiry's indignation been repressed by the suggestion of the lieutenant, who defired his friend in a whisper to be easy, for he would take care to have the attorney toffed in a blanket for his prefumption. This propofal, which he received with great approbation, pacified him in a moment; he wiped the sweat from his forehead, and his features relaxed into a grim smile.

Hatchway disappeared, and Ravine proceeded with great fluency of abuse, until he was interrupted by the arrival of Pipes, who, without any expostulation, led him out by the hand, and conducted him to the yard, where he was put into a carpet, and in a twinkling fent into the air, by the strength and dexterity of five stout operators, whom the lieutenant had selected from the number of domesticks for that singular spell of duty.

In vain did the aftonished vaulter beg for the love of God and passion of Christ, that they would take pity upon him, and put an end to his involuntary gambols; they were deaf to his prayers and protestations, even when he swore in the most solemn manner, that if they would cease tormenting him, he would forget and forgive what was passed, and depart in peace to his own habitation; and continued the game till they were fatigued with the exercise.

Ravine being dismissed in a most melancholy plight, brought an action of affault and battery against the commodore, and subpoena'd all the fervants as evidences in the cause; but as none of them had feen what happened, he did not find his account in the profecution, though he himself examined all the witnesses, and among other questions, asked whether they had not feen him come in like another man? and whether they had ever feen any other man in fuch a condition as that in which he had crawled off? But this last interrogation they were not obliged to answer, because it had reference to the second discipline he had undergone, in which they, and they only were concerned; and no person is bound to give testimony against himself.

In short the attorney was nonsuited, to the satisfaction of all who knew him, and sound himself under the necessity of proving that he had received in course of post the letter which was declared in court a scandalous forgery, in order to prevent an indistment with which he was threatened by the commodore, who little dreamt that the whole affair had been planned and executed by Peregrine and his associates.

The next enterprize in which this triumvirate engaged, was a scheme to frighten Trunnion with an apparition, which they prepared and exhibited in this manner. To the hide of a large ox, Pipes fitted a leathern vizor of a most terrible appearance, stretched on the jaws of a shark which he had brought from fea, and accommodated with a couple of broad glasses instead of eyes. On the infide of thefe he placed two rush lights, and with a composition of sulphur and saltpetre, made a pretty large fuse, which he fixed between two rows of the teeth. This equipage being finished, he, one dark night, chosen for the purpose, put it on, and following the commodore into a long paffage in which he was preceded by Perry with a light in his hand, kindled his fire-work with a match, and began to bellow like a bull. The boy, as it was concerted, looking behind him, fcreamed aloud, and dropped the light, which was extinguished in the fall: when Trunnion, alarmed at his nephew's consternation, exclaimed, "Zounds! what's the matter?" And turning about to fee the cause of his difmay, beheld a hideous phantom vomiting blue flame, which aggravated the horrors of its aspect. He was instantly seized with an agony of fear, which divefted him of his reafon; nevertheless, he, as it were mechanically, raised his trusty supporter in his own defence, and the apparition advancing towards him, aimed it at this dreadful annoyance with fuch a convultive exertion of strength, that had not the blow chanced to light upon one of the horns, Mr Pipes would have had no cause to value himself upon his invention. Misapplied as it was, he did not fail to ftagger at the shock, and dreading another such falutation, closed with the commodore, and having tripped up his heels, retreated with great expedition.

It was then that Peregrine, pretending to recollect himself a little, ran with all the marks of disturbance and affright, and called up the servants to the affistance of their master, whom they found in a cold sweat upon the floor, his seatures betokening horror and consustion. Hatchway raised him up, and having comforted him with a cup of Nantz, began to inquire into the cause of his disorder: but he could not extract one word of answer from his friend, who, after a considerable pause, during which he seemed to be wrapped up in prosound contemplation, pronounced aloud, "By the Lord! Jack, you may say what you wool; but I'll be damned if it was not Davy
Jones himself: I know him by his saucer eyes, his three rows of teeth, his horns and tail, and the blue smoak that came out of his nostrils. What does the black guard hell's baby want with me? I'm fure I never committed murder, except in the way of my profession, nor wronged any man whatsomever fince I first went to sea." This same Davy Jones, according to the mythology of failors, is the fiend that prefides over all the evil spirits of the deep, and is often seen in various shapes, perching among the rigging on the eve of hurricanes, shipwrecks, and other disasters, to which a fea-faring life is exposed; warning the devoted wretch of death and wee. No wonder then that Trunnion was disturbed by a supposed visit of this dæmon, which, in his opinion, foreboded fome dreadful calamity.

CHAP. XIV.

He is also by their device engaged in an adventure with the exciseman, who does not find his account in his own drollery.

HOwfoever preposterous and unaccountable that passion may be, which prompts perfons, otherwise generous and sympathising, to afflict and perplex their fellow-creatures, certain it is, our confederates entertained such a large proportion of it, that not satisfied with the pranks they had already played, they still persecuted the Vol I.

commodore without ceasing. In the course of his own history, the particulars of which he delighted to recount, he had often rehearsed an adventure of deer-stealing, in which (during the unthinking impetuosity of his youth) he had been unfortunately concerned Far from succeeding in that atchievement, he and his associates had (it seems) been made prisoners, after an obstinate engagement with the keepers, and carried before a neighbouring justice of the peace, who used Trunnion with great indignity, and with his companions committed him to jail.

His own relations, and in particular an uncle on whom he chiefly depended, treated him during his confinement with great rigour and inhumanity, and absolutely refused to interpose his influence in his behalf, unless he would sign a writing, obliging himfelf to go to fea within thirty days after his release, under the penalty of being proceeded against as a felon. The alternative was either to undergo this voluntary exile, or remain in prison disowned and deserted by every body, and after all, fuffer an ignominious trial that might end in a sentence of transportation for life. He, therefore, without much hefitation, embraced the proposal of his kinfman, and (as he observed) was in less than a month after his discharge turned adrift to the mercy of the wind and waves.

Since that period, he had never maintained any correspondence with his relations, all of whom had concurred in sending him off; nor would he ever pay the least regard to the humiliations and supplications of some among them, who had prostrated themselves before him, on the advancement of his fortune: but he retained a most inveterate resentment against his uncle, who was still in being, tho' extremely old and infirm, and frequently mentioned his name with all the bitterness of revenge.

Perry being perfectly well acquainted with the particulars of this story, which he had heard so often repeated, proposed to Hatchway, that a person should be hired to introduce himself to the commodore, with a suppositious letter of recommendation from this detested kinsman; an imposition that, in all likelihood, would afford abundance of diversion.

Pickle having composed an epistle for the occasion, the exciseman of the parish, a fellow of great impudence and some humour, in whom Hatchway could confide, undertook to transcribe and deliver it with his own hand, and also personate the man in whose favour it was seigned to be writ. He, accordingly, one morning arrived on horseback at the garrison, two hours at least before Trunnion used to get up, and gave Pipes, who admitted him, to understand, that he had a letter for his master, which he was ordered to deliver to none but the commodore himself. This message was no sooner communicated, than the indignant chief (who had been waked for the purpose) began to curse the messenger for breaking his rest, and swore he would not budge 'till his usual time of turning out. This resolution being conveyed to the stranger, he desired the carrier to go back and tell him, he had such joyful tidings to impart, that he was sure the commodore would think himself amply rewarded for his trouble, even if he had been raised from the grave to receive them.

This affurance, flattering as it was, would not have been powerful enough to persuade him, had it not been affifted with the exhortations of his spouse, which never failed to influence his conduct. He, therefore, crept out of bed, though not without great repugnance, and wrapping himfelf in his morning-gown, was supported down stairs, rubbing his eye, yawning fearfully, and grumbling all the way. As foon as he popt his head into the parlour, the supposed stranger made divers aukward bows, and with a grinning afpect accosted him in these words; "Your most humble fervant, most noble commodore! I hope you are in good health; you look pure and hearty; and if it was not for that misfortune of your eye, one would not desire to see a more pleafant countenance in a fummer's day. Sure as I am a living foul, one would take you to be on this fide of threefcore. Laud help us! I should have known you to be a Trunnion if I had met with you in the midst of Salisbury plain as the faying is." The commodore, who was not at all in the humour of relishing such an impertinent preamble, interrupted him in his place, faying, with a peevish accent, " Pshaw! pshaw! brother, there's no occasion to bows out so much unnecessary gum; if you can't bring your difcourse to bear on the right subject, you had much better clap a stopper on your tongue, and bring yourfelf up, d'ye see: I was told you had something to deliver." " Deliver! (cried the waggish imposture) odd's heart! I have got something for you that will make your very intrails rejoice within your body. Here's a letter from a dear and worthy friend of yours. Take, read it, and be happy. Bleffings on his old heart! one would think he had renewed his age like the eagles." Trunnion's expectation being thus raifed, he called for his spectacles, adjusted them to his eye, took the letter, and being curious to know the fubscription, no sooner perceived his uncle's name, than he started back, his lip quivered, and he began to shake in every limb with refentment and furprise: nevertheless, eager to know the subject of an epiftle from a person who had never before troubled him with any fort of address, he endeavoured to recollect himself, and perused the contents, which were these:

[&]quot; Loving Nephew,

I Doubt not but you will be rejoiced to hear of my welfare; and well you may, considering what a kind uncle I have been to you in the days of your youth, and how little you deserved any fuch thing, for you was always a graceless young man, given to wicked courses and bad company, whereby you would have come to a shameful end, had it not been for my care in fending you out of mischief's way. But this is not the cause of my present writing, The bearer, Mr Timothy Trickle, is a distant relation of yours, being the fon of the cousin of your aunt Margery, and is not over and above well as to worldly matters. He thinks of going to London, to fee for some post in the excise or customs, if so be that you will recommend him to fome great man of your acquaintance, and give him a small matter to keep him till he is provided. I doubt not, nephew, but you will be glad to ferve him, if it was no more but for the respect you bear to me, who am,

Your affectionate Uncle,
and Servant to command,
TOBIAH TRUNNION.*

It would be a difficult task for the inimitable Hogarth himself to exhibit the ludicrous expression of the commodore's countenance, while he read this letter. It was not a stare of astonishment, a convulsion of rage, or a ghastly grin of revenge, but an association of all three, that took possession of his features. At length he hawked up, with incredible straining, the interjection

Ah! that feemed to have fluck fome time in his windpipe, and thus gave vent to his indignation; " Have I come along fide of you at last, you old stinking curmudgeon! you lie, you loufy hulk, ye lie! you did all in your power to founder me when I was a stripling; and as for being gracelefs, and wicked, and keeping bad company, you tell a damned lie again, you thief; there was not a more peaceable lad in the county; and I kept no bad company but your own, d'ye see. Therefore, you Trickle, or what's your name, tell the old rascal that sent you hither, that I spit in his face, and call him Horse; that I tear his letter into rags, fo; and that I trample upon it as I would upon his own villainous carcafe, d'ye fee." So faying, he danced in a fort of frenzy upon the fragments of the paper, which he had scattered about the room, to the inexpressible fatisfaction of the triumvirate, who beheld the scene.

The exciseman having got between him and the door which was lest open for his escape, in case of necessity, affected great consusion and surprise at his behaviour, saying, with an air of mortification, "Lord be merciful unto me! is this the way you treat your own relations, and the recommendation of your best friend? surely all gratitude and virtue has lest this sinful world! what will cousin Tim, and Dick, and Tom, and good mother Pipkin, and her daughters, cousin Sue, and Prue, and Peg, with all the rest of our kinssolk say, when they hear of this unconscionable reception that I have met with? Consider, Sir, that ingratitude is worse than the fin of witehcraft, as the apostle wisely observes; and do not fend me away with fuch unchristian ufage, which will lay a heavy load of guilt upon your poor miserable foul." " What, you are on the cruize for a post, brother Trickle an't ye? (faid Trunnion, interrupting him) we shall find a post for you in a trice, my boy. Here Pipes take this faucy fon of a bitch, be-lay him to the whipping-post in the yard. I'll teach you to rowce me in the morning with fuch impertinent meffages." Pipes, who wanted to carry the joke farther than the exciseman dreamt of, laid hold of him in a twinkling, and executed the orders of his commander, notwithstanding all his nods, winking and fignificant gestures, which the boatfwain's mate would by no means understand: fo that he began to repent of the part he acted in this performance, which was like to end fo tragically, and stood fastened to the stake, in a very difagreeable state of suspence: casting many a rueful look over his left shoulder, (while Pipes was absent in quest of a cat and nine tails) in expectation of being relieved by the interpolition of the lieutenant, who did not, however, appear. Tom returning with the instrument of correction, undressed the delinquent in a trice, and whispering in his ear, that he was very forry for being employed in fuch an office, but durst not for his foul disobey the orders of his commander, flourished the scourge about his head, and with admirable dexterity made such a smarting application to the offender's back and shoulders, that the distracted guager performed sundry new cuts with his feet, and bellowed hideously with pain, to the infinite satisfaction of the spectators. At length, when he was almost slead from his rump to the nape of his neck, Hatchway, who had purposely absented himself hitherto, appeared in the yard, and interposing in his behalf, prevailed upon Trunnion to call off the executioner, and ordered the malesactor to be released.

The exciseman, mad with the catastrophe he had undergone, threatened to be revenged upon his employers, by making a candid confession of the whole plot; but the lieutenant giving him to understand, that in so doing he would bring upon himself a prosecution for fraud, forgery and imposture, he was fain to put up with his loss, and snaked out of the garrison, attended with a volley of curses discharged upon him by the commodore, who was exceedingly irritated by the disturbance and disappointment he had undergone.

CHAP. XV.

The commodore detects the machinations of the conspirators, and hires a tutor for Peregrine, whom he settles at Winchester school.

THIS was not the last affliction he suffered from the unwearied endeavours and inexhausted invention of his tormentors, who harraffed him with such a variety of mischievous pranks, that he began to think all the devils in hell had conspired against his peace; and accordingly became very serious and contemplative on the subject.

In the course of his meditations, when he recollected and compared the circumstances of every mortification to which he had been lately exposed, he could not help suspecting that some of them must have been contrived to vex him;
and as he was not ignorant of his lieutenant's disposition, nor unacquainted with the talents of Peregrine, he resolved to observe them both for the suture with the outmost care and circumspection. This resolution, aided by the incautious conduct of the conspirators, whom, by this time, success had rendered heedless and indiscreet, was attended with the desired effect. He in a little time detected Perry in a new plot, and by dint of a little chastisement, and a great many threats, extorted from him a confession of all the contrivances in which he had been concerned. commodore was thunderstruck at the discovery, and fo much incenfed against Hatchway for the part he had acted in the whole, that he deliberated with himself, whether he should demand fatisfaction with fword and piftol, or difmiss him from the garrison, and renounce all friendship with him at once. But he had been fo long accustomed to Jack's company, that he could not live without him; and upon more cool reflection, perceiving that what he had done was rather the effect of wantonness than malice, which he himself would have laughed to see take place upon any other person, he determined to devour his chagrin, and extend his forgiveness even to Pipes, whom in the first fally of his passion, he had looked upon in a more criminal light than that of a simple mutineer. This determination was feconded by another, which he thought abfolutely necessary for his own repose, and in which his own interest and that of his nephew concurred.

Peregrine, who was now turned of twelve, had made fuch advances under the instruction of Jennings, that he often disputed upon grammar, and was sometimes thought to have the better in his contests with the parish-priest, who, notwithstanding this acknowledged superiority of his antagonist, did great justice to his genius, which he assured Mr Trunnion, would be lost for want of cultivation, if the boy was not immediately fent to profecute his studies at some proper seminary of learning.

This maxim had been more than once inculcated upon the commodore by Mrs Trunnion, who, over and above the deference she paid to the parfon's opinion, had a reason of her own, for wishing to fee the house clear of Peregrine, at whose prying disposition she began to be very uneasy. Induced by these motives, which were joined by the folicitation of the youth himfelf, who ardently longed to fee a little more of the world, his uncle determined to fend him forthwith to Winchester, under the immediate care and inspection of a governor, to whom he allowed a very handsome appointment for that purpose. This gentleman, whose name was Mr Jacob Jolter, had been school-fellow with the parson of the parish who recommended him to Mrs Trunnion as a person of great worth and learning, in every respect qualified for the office of a tutor. He likewise added, by way of eulogium, that he was a man of exemplary piety, and particularly zealous for the honour of the church, of which he was a member, having been many years in holy orders, though he did not then exercise any function of the priesthood. Indeed, Mr Jolter's zeal was fo exceedingly fervent, as, on fome occasions, to get the better of his discretion: for being an high churchman, and of consequence a malecontent, his resentment was habituated into an infurmountable prejudice against the present disposition of affairs, which, by confounding the nation with the ministry, sometimes led him into erroneous, not to say absurd calculations; otherwise, a man of good morals, well versed in mathematics and school-divinity, studies which had not at all contributed to sweeten and unbend the natural sourness and severity of his complexion.

This gentleman being destined to the charge of fuperintending Perry's education, every thing was prepared for their departure; and Tom Pipes, in confequence of his own petition, put into livery, and appointed footman to the young fquire. But, before they fet out, the commodore paid the compliment of communicating his defign to Mr Pickle. who approved of the plan, though he durst not venture to fee the boy; fo much was he intimidated by the remonstrances of his wife, whose aversion to her first-born became every day more inveterate and unaccountable. This unnatural caprice feemed to be supported by a confideration which (one would imagine) might have rather vanquished her disgust. Her second son Gam, who was now in the fourth year of his age, had been ricketty from the cradle, and as remarkably unpromising in appearance as Perry was agreeable in his person. As the deformity increased, the mother's fondness was augmented, and the virulence of her hate against the other son feemed to prevail in the same proportion.

Vol. I. M

Far from allowing Perry to enjoy the common privileges of a child, she would not suffer him to approach his father's house, expressed uneafiness whenever his name happened to be mentioned, fickened at his praise, and in all respects behaved like a most rancorous step-mother. Though she no longer retained that ridiculous notion of his being an impostor, she still continued to abhor him, as if she really believed him to be such; and when any person defired to know the cause of her furprifing diflike, she always loft her temper, and peevishly replied, that she had reasons of her own, which she was not obliged to declare: nay, fo much was she infected by this vicious partiality, that the broke off all commerce with her fifter-inlaw and the commodore, because they favoured the poor child with their countenance and protection.

Her malice, however, was frustrated by the love and generofity of Trunnion, who having adopted him as his own fon, equipped him accordingly, and carried him and his governor in his own coach to the place of destination, where they were fettled on a very genteel footing, and every thing regulated according to their defires.

Mrs Trunnion behaved with great decency at the departure of her nephew, to whom, with a great many pious advices, and injunctions to behave with submission and reverence towards his tutor, she presented a diamond-ring of small value, and a gold medal, as tokens of her affection and esteem. As for the lieutenant he accompanied them in the coach; and such was the friendship he had contracted for Perry, that when the commodore proposed to return, after having accomplished the intent of his journey, Jack absolutely resused to attend him, and signified his resolution to stay where he was.

Trunnion was the more startled at this declaration, as Hatchway was become fo necessary to him in almost all the purposes of his life, that he forefaw he should not be able to exist without his company. Not a little affected with this consideration, he turned his eye ruefully upon the lieutenant, faying in a piteous tone, " What! leave me at last, Jack, after we have weathered somany hard gales together? D-n my limbs! I thought you had been more of an honest heart: I looked upon you as my foremast, and Tom Pipes as my mizen: now he is carried away, if fo be as you go too, my standing rigging being decayed, d'ye fee, the first squall will bring me by the board. D-n ye, if in case I have given offence, can't ye speak above board? and I shall make you amends."

Jack being ashamed to own the true situation of his thoughts, after some hesitation, answered with perplexity and incoherence, "No, damme! that an't the case neither: to be sure you always used me in an officer-like manner, that I must own, to give the devil his due, as the saying is; but for all that, this here is the case, I have some thoughts of going to school myself to learn your Latin lingo; for, as the faying is, Better late mend than never. And I am informed as how one can get more for the money here than any where else."

In vain did Trunnion endeavour to convince him of the folly of going to school at his years, by representing that the boys would make game of him, and that he would become a laughingstock to all the world; he persisted in his resolution to stay, and the commodore was fain to have recourse to the mediation of Pipes and Perry, who employed their influence with Jack, and at last prevailed upon him to return to the garrison, after-Trunnion had promised he should be at liberty to visit them once a month. This stipulation being settled, he and his friend took leave of the pupil, governor and attendant, and next morning set out for their habitation, which they reached in safety that same night.

Such was Hatchway's reluctance to leave Peregrine, that he is faid, for the first time in his life, to have looked misty at parting: certain I am, that on the road homewards, after a long pause of silence, which the commodore never dreamt of interrupting, he exclaimed all of a sudden, "I'll be damned if the dog han't given me some stuff to make me love him." Indeed, there was something congenial in the disposition of these two friends, which never failed to manifest itself in the sequel, howsoever different their education, circumstances and connections happened to be.

CHAP. XVI.

Peregrine distinguishes himself among his school-fellows, exposes his tutor, and attracts the particular notice of the master.

Peregrine was in a little time a distinguished character, not only for his acuteness of apprehension, but also for that mischievous fertility of fancy, of which we have already given such pregnant examples. But as there was a great number of such luminaries in this new sphere to which he belonged, his talents were not so conspicuous while they shone in his single capacity, as they afterwards appeared, when they concentrated and reslected the rays of the whole constellation.

At first he confined himself to piddling game, exercising his genius upon his own tutor, who attracted his attention, by endeavouring to seafon his mind with certain political maxims, the fallacy of which he had discernment enough to perceive. Scarce a day passed, in which he did not find means to render Mr Joster the object of ridicule; his violent prejudices, ludicrous vanity, aukward solemnity and ignorance of mankind, afforded continual food for the raillery, petulance and fatire of this pupil, who never neglected an opportunity of laughing, and making others laugh at his expence.

Sometimes in their parties, by mixing brandy in his wine, he decoyed this pedagogue into a debauch, during which his caution forfook him, and he exposed himself to the censure of the company. Sometimes when the conversation turned upon intricate subjects, he practised upon him the socratic method of consutation, and under pretence of being informed by an artful train of puzzling questions, insensibly betrayed him into self-contradiction.

All the remains of authority which he had hitherto preferved over Peregrine soon vanished; so that, for the suture, no sort of ceremony sub-sisted between them, and all Mr Jolter's precepts were conveyed in hints of friendly advice, which the other might either follow or neglect at his own pleasure. No wonder then that Peregrine gave a loose to his inclinations, and by dint of genius and an enterprising temper, made a figure among the younger class of heroes in the school.

Before he had been a full year at Winchester, he had signalized himself in so many atchievements, in defiance to the laws and regulations of the place, that he was looked upon with admiration, and actually chosen Dux, or leader, by a large body of his cotemporaries. It was not long before his same reached the ears of the master, who sent for Mr Jolter, communicated to him the informations he had received, and desired him to check the vivacity of his charge, and redouble his vigilance in time to come, else he should be obliged to make a public example of his pupil for the benefit of the school.

The governor, conscious of his own unimportance, was not a little disconcerted at this injunction, which it was not in his power to fulfil by any compulsive means. He, therefore, went home in a very pensive mood; and after mature deliberation, refolved to expostulate with Peregrine in the most familiar terms, and endeavour to dissuade him from practices which might affect his character as well as interest. He accordingly frankly told him the subject of the master's difcourse, represented the disgrace he might incur by neglecting this warning; and putting him in mind of his own fituation, hinted the confequences of the commodore's displeasure, in case he should be brought to disapprove of his conduct. These infinuations made the greater impression, as they were delivered with many expressions of friendship and concern. The young gentleman was not fo raw, but that he could perceive the folidity of Mr Jolter's advice, to which he promiled to conform, because his pride was interested in the affair; and he considered his own reformation as the only means of avoiding that infamy which even in idea he could not bear.

His governor finding him fo reasonable, profited

by these moments of reslexion; and in order to prevent a relapse, proposed that he should engage in some delightful study that would agreeably amuse his imagination, and gradually detach him from those connexions, which had involved him in so many troublesome adventures. For this purpose, he, with many rapturous encomiums, recommended the mathematics, as yielding more rational and sensible pleasures to a youthful sancy than any other subject of contemplation; and actually began to read Euclid with him that same afternoon.

Peregrine entered into this branch of learning with all that warmth of application which boys commonly yield on the first change of study; but he had scarce advanced beyond the Pons Afinorum, when his ardour abated, the test of truth by demonstration did not elevate him to those transports of joy with which his preceptor had regaled his expectation; and before he arrived at the fortieth and feventh proposition, he began to yawn drearily, make abundance of wry faces, and thought himself but indifferently paid for his attention, when he shared the vast discovery of Pythagoras, and understood that the square of the hypothenuse was equal to the squares of the other two fides of a right-angled triangle. He was ashamed, however, to fail in his undertaking, and persevered with great-industry, until he had finished the first four books, acquired plain trigonometry, with the method of algebraical calculation, and made himself well acquainted with the principles of surveying. But no consideration could prevail upon him to extend his inquiries farther in this science; and he returned with double relish to his former avocations, like a stream which being dammed, accumulates more force, and bursting o'er its mounds, rushes down with double impetuofity.

Mr Jolter faw with aftonishment and chagrin, but could not resist the torrent. His behaviour was now no other than a feries of licence and effrontery; prank fucceeded prank, and outrage followed outrage with furprifing velocity. Complaints were every day preferred against him; in vain were admonitions bestowed by the governor in private, and menaces discharged by the masters in public; he difregarded the first, despised the latter, divested himself of all manner of restraint, and proceeded in his career to such a pitch of audacity, that a confultation was held upon the subject, in which it was determined that this untoward spirit should be humbled by a fevere and ignominious flogging for the very next offence he should commit. In the mean time Mr Jolter was defired to write in the mafter's name to the commodore, requesting him to remove Tom Pipes from the person of his nephew, the faid Pipes being a principal actor and abbettor in all his malversations; and to put a stop to the monthly visitations of the mutilated lieutenant, who had never once failed to use his permission, but came punctual to a day, always fraught with fome new invention. Indeed, by this time, Mr Hatchway was as well known, and much better beloved by every boy in the school than the master who instructed him, and always received by a number of scholars, who used to attend Peregrine when he went forth to meet his friend, and conduct him to his lodging with public testimonies of joy and applause.

As for Tom Pipes, he was not so properly the attendant of Peregrine, as master of the revels to the whole school. He mingled in all their parties, and fuperintended the diversions, deciding between boy and boy, as if he acted by commission under the great feal. He regulated their motions by his whiftle, instructed the young boys in the games of hustle-cap, leap-frog, and chuck-farthing; imparted to those of a more advanced age the sciences of cribbage and all-fours, together with the method of storming the castle, acting the comedy of prince Arthur, and other pantomimes, as they are commonly exhibited at fea; and instructed the seniors who were distinguished by the appellation of bloods, in cudgel playing, dancing the St Giles's hornpipe, drinking flip, and smoaking tobacco. These qualifications, had rendered him so necessary and acceptable to the scholars, that, exclusive of Perry's concern in the affair, his difmission, in all probability, would have produced some dangerous convulsion in the community. Jolter, therefore, knowing his importance, informed his pupil of the directions he had received, and very candidly asked how he should demean himfelf in the execution; for he durst not write to the commodore without his previous notice, fearing that the young gentleman, as foon as he should get an inkling of the affair, would follow the example, and make his uncle acquainted with certain anecdotes, which it was the governor's interest to keep concealed. Peregrine was of opinion that he should spare himself the trouble of conveying any complaints to the commodore; and if questioned by the master, assure him he had complied with his defire; at the fame time he promised faithfully to conduct himself with such circumspection for the future, that the masters should have no temptation to revive the inquiry. But the refolution attending this extorted promife was too frail to last, and in less than a fortnight, our young hero found himfelf intangled in an adventure from which he was not extricated with his ufual good fortune.

CHAP. XVII.

He is concerned in a dangerous adventure with a certain gardener; fublimes his ideas, commences gallant, and becomes acquainted with Miss Emily Gauntlet.

HE and some of his companions one day entered a garden in the suburbs, and having indulged their appetites, defired to know what fatisfaction they must make for the fruit they had pulled. The gardener demanded what (in their opinion) was an exorbitant price, and they with many opprobrious terms refused to pay it. The peafant being furly and intractable, infifted upon his right; neither was he deficient or sparing in the eloquence of vulgar abuse. His guests attempted to retreat; a scuffle ensued, in which Peregrine loft his cap; and the gardener being in danger from the number of his foes, called to his wife to let loofe the dog, who instantly flew to his mafter's affiftance; and after having tore the leg of one, and the shoulder of another, put the whole body of scholars to flight. Enraged at the indignity which had been offered them, they folicited a reinforcement of their friends, and with Tom Pipes at their head, marched back to the field of Their adversary seeing them approach, called his apprentice, who worked at the other end of the ground, to his affistance, armed him with a mattock, while he himself wielded an hoe, bolted his door on the infide, and flanked with his man and mastiff, waited the attack without flinching. He had not remained three minutes in this posture of defence, when Pipes, who acted as the enemy's forlorn hope, advanced to the gate with great intrepidity, and clapping his foot to the door, which was none of the stoutest, with the execution and dispatch of a petard, split it in a thousand pieces. This sudden execution had an immediate effect upon the 'prentice, who retreated with great precipitation, and escaped at a postern. But the master placed himself like another Hercules in the breach; and when Pipes, brandishing his cudgel, stepped forward to engage him, levelled his weapon with fuch force and dexterity at his head, that had the skull been made of penetrable stuff, the iron edge must have cleft his pate in twain. Casemated as he was, the instrument cut sheer even to the bone, on which it struck with fuch amazing violence that sparks of real fire were produced by the collision. And let not the incredulous reader pretend to doubt the truth of this phænomenon, until he shall have first perused the ingenious Peter Kolben's Natural History of the Cape of Good Hope, where the inhabitants commonly use to strike fire with the shin-bones of lions which have been killed in that part of Africk.

Pipes, though a little disconcerted, far from being disabled by the blow, in a trice retorted the compliment with his truncheon, which, had not his antagonist expeditiously slipped his head aside, would have laid him breathless across his own threshold; but, happily for him, he received the salutation upon his right shoulder, which crashed beneath the stroke, and the hoe dropped instantly from his tingling hand. Tom perceiving, and being unwilling to forego the advantage he had gained, darted his head into the bosom of this son of earth, and overturned him on the plain, being himself that instant assaulted by the mastiss, who fastened upon the outside of his thigh. Feeling himself incommoded by this assailant in his rear, he quitted the prostrate gardener to the resentment of his associates, who poured upon him in shoals, and turning about, laid hold with both his hands of this ferocious animal's throat, which he squeezed with such incredible force and perseverance, that the creature quitted his hold; his tongue lolled out of his jaws, the blood started from his eyes, and he swung a lifeless trunk between the hands of his vanquisher.

Vol. I.

146 . THE ADVENTURES OF

It was well for his master that he did not longer exist! for by this time he was overwhelmed by fuch a multitude of foes, that his whole body scarce afforded points of contact to all the fifts that drummed upon it, confequently, to use a vulgar phrase, his wind was almost knocked out before Pipes had leifure to enterpose in his behalf, and perfuade his offenders to defift, by representing that the wife had gone to alarm the neighbourhood, and that in all probability, they would be intercepted in their return. They accordingly listened to his remonstrances, and marched homewards in triumph, leaving the gardener in the embraces of his mother-earth, from which he had not power to move when he was found by his disconsolate helpmate and some friends whom the had affembled for his affift-Among these was a blacksmith and ferrier, who took cognizance of his carcafe, every limb of which having examined, he declared there was no bone broke, and taking out his fleam, blooded him plentifully as he lay. He was then conveyed to his bed, from which he was not able to ftir during a whole month. His family coming upon the parish, a formal complaint was made to the master of the school, and Peregrine represented as the ring-leader of those who committed this barbarous affault. An inquiry was immediately fet on foot; and the articles of impeachment being fully proved, our hero was sentenced to be severely chastised in the face of the whole school. This was a difgrace, the thoughts of which his proud heart could not brook. He refolved to make his elopement rather than undergo the punishment to which he was doomed; and having fignified his fentiments to his confederates, they promifed, one and all to stand by him, and either screen him from chastisement, or share his fate.

Confiding in this friendly protestation, he appeared unconcerned on the day that was appointed for his punishment; and when he was called to his destiny, advanced towards the scene, attended by the greatest part of the scholars, who intimated their determination to the master, and proposed that Peregrine should be forgiven. The superior behaved with that dignity of demeanor which became his place, represented the folly and presumption of their demand, reprehended them for their audacious proceeding, and ordered every boy to his respective station. They obeyed his command, and our unfortunate hero was publicly horsed, in terrorem of all whom it might concern.

This disgrace had a very sensible effect upon the mind of Peregrine, who having by this time passed the sourteenth year of his age, began to adopt the pride and sentiments of a man. Thus dishonourably stigmatized, he was ashamed to appear in public as usual, he was incensed against his companions for their insidelity and irresolution, and plunged into a prosound reverie that lasted several weeks, during which he shook off his boyish connections, and fixed his view upon objects which he thought more worthy of his attention.

In the course of his gymnastic exercises, at which he was very expert, he contracted intimacies with several youths who were greatly his superiors in point of age, and who, pleased with his aspiring genius and address, introduced him into parties of gallantry, which strongly captivated his inclination. He was by nature particularly adapted for succeeding in adventures of this kind; over and above a most engaging person that improved with his years, he possessed a dignified assurance, an agreeable ferocity which inhanced the conquest of the fair who had the good fortune to enslave him, unlimited generosity, and a fund of humour which never failed to please. Nor was he desicient in the more solid accomplishments of youth; he had profited in his studies beyond expectation; and besides that sensibility of discernment which is the foundation of taste, and in consequence of which he distinguished and enjoyed the beauties of the Classics, he had already given several specimens of a very promising poetic talent.

With this complexion and these qualifications, no wonder that our hero attracted the notice and affections of the young Delias in town, whose hearts had just begun to flutter for they knew not what. Inquiries were made concerning his condition; and no fooner were his expectations known, than he was invited and careffed by all the parents, while their daughters vied with each other in treating him with particular complacency. He inspired love and emulation where-ever he appeared; envy and jealous rage followed of course; so that he became a very defirable, though a very dangerous acquaintance. His moderation was not equal to his fuccess, his vanity took the lead of his passions, distipating his attention, which might otherwise have fixed him to one object; and was possessed with the rage of increasing the number of his conquests. With this view he frequented public walks, concerts and affemblies, became remarkably rich and fashionable in his cloaths, gave entertainments to the ladies, and was in the utmost hazard of turning out a most egregious coxcomb.

While his character thus wavered between the ridicule of some, and the regard of others, an accident happened, which by contracting his view to one object, detached him from those vain purfuits that would in time have plunged him into an abyse of folly and contempt. Being one evening at the ball which is always given to the ladies at the time of the races, the person who acted as master of the ceremonies, knowing how fond Mr Pickle was of every opportunity to display himself, came up and told him, that there was a fine young creature at the other end of the room, who seemed to have a great inclination to dance a minuet, but wanting a partner, the gentleman who attended her being in boots.

Peregrine's vanity being aroused at this intimation, he went up to reconnoitre the young lady, and was struck with admiration at her beauty. She feemed to be of his own age, was tall, and, tho' flender, exquisitely shaped; her hair was auburn, and in fuch plenty, that the barbarity of dress had not been able to prevent it from shading both fides of her forehead, which was fo high and polished; the contour of her face was oval, her nofe very little raifed into the acquiline form, that contributed to the spirit and dignity of her aspect; her mouth was small, her lips plump, juicy and delicious, her teeth regular and white as driven fnow, her complexion incredibly delicate and glowing with health, and her full blue eyes beamed forth vivacity and love: her mein was at the same time commanding and engaging, her address perfectly genteel, and her whole appearance so captivating, that our young Adonis looked, and was overcome.

He no sooner recollected himself from his astonishment, than he advanced to her with a graceful air of respect, and begged she would do him the honour to walk a minuet with him. She feemed particularly pleafed with his application, and very frankly complied with his request: This pair was too remarkable to escape the particular notice of the company; Mr Pickle was well known by almost every body in the room, but his partner was altogether a new face, and of consequence underwent the criticism of all the ladies in the affembly; one whifpered, "She has a good complexion, but don't you think she is a little awry? A fecond pitied her for her masculine nose; a third observed, that she was aukward for want of feeing company; a fourth diffinguished fomething very bold in her countenance; and in short, there was not a beauty in her whole composition, which the glass of envy did not pervert into a blemish.

The men, however, looked upon her with different eyes; among them her appearance produced an universal murmur of applause; they encircled the space on which she danced, and were enchanted by her graceful motion. While they launched out in the praise of her, they expressed their displeasure at the good fortune of her partner, whom they damned for a little finical coxcomb, that was too much engroffed by the contemplation of his own person, to discern or deserve the favour of his fate. He did not hear, therefore could not repine at these invectives; but while they imagined he indulged his vanity, a much more generous passion had taken possession of his heart.

Instead of that petulance of gaiety for which he had been distinguished in his public appearance, he now gave manifest signs of confusion and concern; he danced with an anxiety which impeded his performance, and blushed to the eyes, at every false step he made. Though this extraordinary agitation was overlooked by the men, it could not escape the observation of the ladies, who perceived it with equal surprise and resentment; and when Peregrine led this fair unknown to her seat, expressed their pique in an affected titter, which broke from every mouth at the same instant, as if all of them had been informed by the same spirit.

Peregrine was nettled at this unmannerly mark of disapprobation, and in order to increase their chagrin, endeavoured to enter into particular conversation with their fair rival. The young lady herself, who neither wanted penetration, nor the consciousness of her own accomplishments, resented their behaviour, though she triumphed at the cause of it, and gave her partner all the encouragement he could desire. Her mother, who was present, thanked him for his civility in taking fuch notice of a stranger; and he received a compliment of the same nature from the young gentleman in boots, who was her own brother.

If he was charmed with her appearance, he was quite ravished with her discourse, which was fensible, spirited and gay. Her frank and sprightly demeanour excited his own confidence and good humour; and he described to her the characters of those females who had honoured them with fuch a spiteful mark of distinction, in terms fo replete with humorous fatire, that she seemed to listen with particular complacency of attention, and diftinguished every nymph thus ridiculed with fuch a fignificant glance as over-whelmed her with chagrin and mortification. In fhort, they feemed to relish each other's conversation, during which our young Damon acquitted himself with great skill in all the duties of gallantry; he laid hold of proper opportunities to express his admiration of her charms, had recourse to the filent rhetoric of tender looks, breathed divers infidious fighs, and attached himself wholly to her during the remaining part of the entertainment.

When the company broke up, he attended her to her lodgings, and took leave of her with a fqueeze of the hand, after having obtained permission to visit her next morning, and been informed by the mother that her name was Miss Emilia Gauntlet.

All night long he closed not an eye, but amufed himself with plans of pleasure, which his imagination suggested, in consequence of this new acquaintance. He rose with the lark, adjusted his hair into an agreeable negligence of curl, and dressing himself in a genteel grey frock, trimmed with silver binding, waited with the utmost impatience for the hour of ten, which no sooner struck than he hied him to the place of appointment, and inquiring for Miss Gauntlet, was shewn into a parlour. Here he had not waited above ten minutes, when Emilia entered in a most enchanting undress, with all the graces of nature playing about her person, and in a moment rivetted the chains of his slavery beyond the power of accident to unbind.

Her mother being still a-bed, and her brother gone to give orders about the chaise, in which they proposed to return that same day to their own habitation, he enjoyed her company tete a tete a whole hour, during which he declared his love in the most passionate terms, and begged that he might be admitted into the number of those admirers whom she permitted to visit and adore her.

She affected to look upon his vows and proteftations as the ordinary effects of gallantry; and very obligingly affured him, that were she to live in that place, she would be glad to see him often; but as the spot on which she resided was at a considerable distance, she could not expect he would go so far upon such a trisling occasion, to take the trouble of providing himself with her mamma's permission. To this favourable hint, he answered with all the eagerness of the most fervid passion, that he had uttered nothing but the genuine dictates of his heart; that he desired nothing so much as an opportunity of evincing the sincerity of his professions; and that though he lived at the extremity of the kingdom, he would find means to lay himself at her feet, provided he could visit her with her mother's consent, which he assured her he would not fail to solicit.

She then gave him to understand, that her habitation was about fixteen miles from Winchester; in a village which she named, and where (as he could easily collect from her discourse) he would be no unwelcome guest.

In the midst of this communication, they were joined by Mrs Gauntlet, who received him with great courtesy, thanking him again for his politeness to Emy at the ball, and anticipated his intention, by saying that she should be very glad to see him at her house, if ever his occasions should oall him that way.

CHAP. XVIII.

He inquires into the situation of this young lady with whom he is enamoured; elopes from school; is found by the lieutenant, conveyed to Winchester, and fends a letter with a copy of verfes to his mifirefs.

TE was transported with pleasure at this invitation, which he affured her he should not neglect; and after a little more conversation on general topics, took his leave of the charming Emilia, and her prudent mamma, who had perceived the first emotions of Mr Pickle's passion for her daughter, and been at some pains to inquire about his family and fortune.

Neither was Peregrine less inquisitive about the fituation and pedigree of his new mistress, who, he learned, was the only daughter of a field-officer who died before he had it in his own power to make fuitable provision for his children; that the widow lived in a frugal, though decent manner, on her pension, assisted by the bounty of her relations; that the fon carried arms as volunteer in the company which his father had commanded; and that Emilia had been educated in London, at the expence of a rich uncle, who was feized with the whim of marrying at the age of fifty-five; in consequence of which, his neice had returned to her mother, without any visible dependence, except on her own conduct and qualifications.

This account, though it could not diminish his affection, nevertheless alarmed his pride; for his warm indignation had exaggerated all his own prospects; and he began to fear, that his passion for Emilia might be thought to derogate from the dignity of his fituation. The struggle between his interest and love produced a perplexity which had an evident effect upon his behaviour; he became pensive, folitary and peevish, avoided all public divertions, and grew fo remarkably negligent in his drefs, that he was fcarce distinguishable by his own acquaintance. This contention of thoughts continued feveral weeks, at the end of which the charms of Emilia triumphed over every other confideration. Having received a fupply of money from the commodore, who acted towards him with great generofity, he ordered Pipes to put up some linnen, and other necessaries, in a fort of knapfack which he could conveniently carry, and thus attended, fet out early one morning on foot for the village where his charmer lived, at which he arrived before two o'clock in the afternoon; having chosen this method of travelling, that his route might not be so easily discovered, as it must have been, had he hired horses, or taken a place in the stage coach.

The first thing he did was to secure a convenient lodging at the inn where he dined; then he fhifted himfelf, and according to the direction he had received, went to the house of Mrs Gauntlet in a transport of joyous expectation. approached the gate his agitation increased, he knocked with impatience and concern, the door opened, and he had actually asked if Mrs Gauntlet was at home, before he perceived that the portress was no other than his dear Emilia. She was not without emotion at the unexpected fight of her lover, who instantly recognising his charmer, obeyed the irrefistable impulse of his love, and caught the fair creature in his arms. did the feem offended at this forwardness of behaviour, which might have displeased another of a less open disposition, or less used to the freedom of a fensible education; but her natural frankness had been encouraged and improved by the easy and familiar intercourse in which she had been bred; and, therefore, instead of reprimanding him with a feverity of look, she with great good humour rallied him upon his affurance, which she observed, was undoubtedly the effect of his own conscious merit, and conducted him into a parlour, where he found her mother, who in very polite terms expressed her satisfaction at seeing him within her house.

Vol. I. O

After tea, Miss Emy proposed an evening walk, which they enjoyed through a variety of little copfes and lawns, watered by a most romantic stream, and quite enchanted the imagination of Peregrine.

It was late before they returned from this agreeable excursion, and when our lover wished the ladies good night, Mrs Gauntlet infifted upon his staying to supper, and treated him with particular demonstrations of regard and affection. occonomy was not encumbered with an unneceffary number of domestics, herown presence was often required in different parts of the house, so that the young gentleman was supplied with frequent opportunities of promoting his fuit, by all the tender oaths and infinuations that his passion could fuggest. He protested, her idea had taken such entire possession of his heart, that finding himself unable to support her absence one day longer, he had quitted his studies, and left his governor by stealth, that he might visit the object of his adoration, and be bleffed in her company for a few days without interruption.

She listened to his addresses with such affability as denoted approbation and delight, and gently chid him as a thoughtless truant, but carefully avoided the confession of a mutual slame; because she discerned, in the midst of all his tenderness, a levity of pride which she durst not venture to trust with such a declaration. Perhaps she was confirmed in this caution by her mother, who very wifely, in her civilities to him, maintained a fort of ceremonious distance, which she thought not only requisite for the honour and interest of her family, but likewise for her own exculpation, should she ever be taxed with having encouraged or abetted him in the imprudent fallies of his youth: yet notwithstanding this affected reserve, he was treated with such distinction by both, that he was ravished with his situation, and became more and more enamoured every day.

While he remained under the influence of this fweet intoxication, his absence produced great disturbance at Winchester. Mr Jolter was grievously afflicted at his abrupt departure, which alarmed him the more, as it happened after a long fit of melancholy which he had perceived in his pupil. He communicated his apprehensions to the master of the school, who advised him to apprise the commodore of his nephew's disappearance, and in the mean time inquire at all the inns in town, whether he had hired horses, or any sort of carriage, for his conveyance, or was met with on the road by any person who could give an account of the direction in which he travelled.

This scrutiny, though performed with great diligence and minuteness, was altogether ineffectual; they could obtain no intelligence of the runaway. Mr Trunnion was well nigh distracted at the news of his slight; he raved with great sury at the imprudence of Peregrine, whom in his first transports he damned as an ungrateful deferter; then he cursed Hatchway and Pipes, who he swore had soundered the lad by their pernicious counsels; and, lastly, transferred his execrations upon Jolter, because he had not kept a better look-out: sinally, he made an apostrophe to that son of a bitch the gout, which for the present disabled him from searching for his nephew in person. That he might not, however, neglect any means in his power, he immediately dispatched expresses to all the sea-port towns on that coast, that he might be prevented from leaving the kingdom; and the lieutenant, at his own desire, was sent across the country, in quest of this young fugitive.

Four days had he unsuccessfully carried on his inquiries with great accuracy, when, refolving to return by Winchester, where he hoped to meet with some hints of intelligence, by which he might profit in his future fearch, he struck off the common road to take the benefit of a nearer cut; and finding himself benighted near a village, took up his lodging at the first inn to which his horse directed him. Having bespoke fomething for supper, and retired to his chamber, where he amused himself with a pipe, he heard a confused noise of rustic jollity, which being all of a fudden interrupted, after a short pause his ear was faluted with the voice of Pipes, who, at the folicitation of the company, began to entertain them with a fong.

Hatchway instantly recognized the well known found, in which indeed he could not possibly be mistaken, as nothing in nature bore the least resemblance to it; he threw his pipe into the chimney, and fnatching up one of his pistols, ran immediately to the apartment from whence the voice issued; he no sooner entered, than distinguishing his old ship-mate in a crowd of country peasants, in a moment sprung upon him, and clapping his pistol to his breast, exclaimed, "Damn you, Pipes, you are a dead man, if you don't immediately produce young mafter."

This menacing application had a much greater effect upon the company than upon Tom, who looking at the lieutenant with great tranquility, replied, " Why fo I can, Mafter Hatchway." "What! fafe and found?" cried the other. " As a roach," answered Pipes, so much to the fatisfaction of his friend Jack, that he shook him by the hand, and defired him to proceed with his fong. This being performed, and the reckoning discharged, the two friends adjourned to the other room, where the lieutenant was informed of the manner in which the young gentleman had made his elopement from college, as well as of the other particulars of his present situation, as far as they had fallen within the fphere of his comprehension.

While they fat thus conferring together, Peregrine having taken his leave of his mistress for the night, came home, and was not a little surprised, when Hatchway entering his chamber in his sea attitude, thrust out his hand by way of salutation. His old pupil received him as usual, with great cordiality, and expressed his astonishment at meeting him in that place; but when he understood the cause and intention of his arrival, he started with concern; and his visage glowing with indignation, told him he was old enough to be judge of his own conduct, and when he should see it convenient, should return of himself; but those who thought he was to be compelled to his duty, would find themselves egregiously mistaken.

The lieutenant assured him, that for his own part he had no intention to offer him the least violence: but at the same time, he represented to him the danger of incensing the commodore, who was already almost distracted on account of his absence: and in short, conveyed his arguments, which were equally obvious and valid, in such expressions of friendship and respect, that Peregrine yielded to his remonstrances, and promised to accompany him next day to Winchester.

Hatchway, overjoyed at the fuccess of his negociation, went immediately to the hostler and bespoke a post-chaise for Mr Pickle and his man, with whom he afterwards indulged himself in a double cann of rumbo, and when the night was pretty far advanced, left the lover to his repose, or rather to the thorns of his own meditation; for he slept not one moment, being incessantly tortured with the prospect of parting from his divine Emilia, who had now acquired the most absolute empire over his soul. One minute he proposed to depart early in the morning without feeing this enchantress, in whose bewitching prefence he durst not trust his own resolution. Then the thoughts of leaving her in such an abrupt and disrespectful manner, interposed in favour of his love and honour. This war of sentiments kept him all night upon the rack, and it was time to rise before he had determined to visit his charmer, and candidly impart the motives that induced him to leave her.

He accordingly repaired to her mother's house with a heavy heart, being attended to the gate by Hatchway, who did not chuse to leave him alone; and being admitted, found Emilia just risen, and, in his opinion, more beautiful than ever.

Alarmed at his early visit, and the gloom that overspread his countenance, she stood in filent expectation of hearing fome melancholy tidings; and it was not till after a confiderable paufe, that he collected refolution enough to tell her he was come to take his leave. Though she strove to conceal her forrow, nature was not to be fuppressed; every feature of her countenance saddened in a moment, and it was not without the utmost difficulty that she kept her lovely eyes from overflowing. He faw the fituation of her thoughts, and in order to alleviate her concern, affured her he should find means to fee her again in a very few weeks; mean while he communicated his reasons for departing, in which shereadily acquiefced: and having mutually confoled each other, their transports of grief subfided,, and before Mrs Gauntlet came down stairs they were in a condition to behave with great decency and refignation.

This good lady expressed her concern when she learned his resolution, saying, she hoped his occasions and inclinations would permit him to favour them with his agreeable company another time.

The lieutenant, who began to be uneafy at Peregrine's stay, knocked at the door, and being introduced by his friend, had the honour of breakfasting with the ladies; on which occasion his heart received such a rude shock from the charms of Emilia, that he afterwards made a merit with his friend of having constrained himself so far, as to sorbear commencing his professed rival.

At length they bade adieu to their kind entertainers; and in less than an hour setting out from the inn, arrived about two o'clock in Winchester, where Mr Jolter was overwhelmed with joy at their appearance.

The nature of this adventure being unknown to all except those who could be depended upon, every body who inquired about the cause of Peregrine's absence, was told that he had been with a relation in the country, and the master condescended to overlook his indiscretion; so that Hatchway seeing every thing settled to the satisfaction of his friend, returned to the garrison, and gave the commodore an account of his expedition.

The old gentleman was very much startled when he heard there was a lady in the case, and very emphatically observed, that a man had better be fucked into the gulph of Florida than once get into the indraught of a woman; because in one case, he may with good pilotage bring out his vessel safe between the Bahama's and the Indian shore; but in the other there is no outlet at all, and it is in vain to strive against the current; fo that of course he must be embayed, and run chuck upon a lee-shore. He resolved, therefore, to lay the state of the case before Mr Gamaliel Pickle, and concert fuch measures with him as should be thought likeliest to detach his fon from the pursuit of an idle amour, which could not fail of interfering in a dangerous manner with the plan of his education.

In the mean time, Perry's ideas were totally engrossed by his amiable mistress, who, whether he slept or waked, was still present in his imagination, which produced the following stanzas in her praise.

I.

Adieu, ye streams that smoothly slow, Ye vernal airs that softly blow, Ye plains by blooming spring array'd, Ye birds that warble thro' the shade.

II.

Unhurt from you my foul could fly, Nor drop one tear, nor heave one figh, But forc'd from Celia's charms to part, All joy deferts my drooping heart.

III:

O! fairer than the rofy morn, When flowers the dewy fields adorn; Unfullied as the genial ray, That warms the balmy breeze of May.

IV.

Thy charms divinely bright appear, And add new splendor to the year; Improve the day with fresh delight, And gild with joy the dreary night!

This juvenile production was enclosed in a very tender billet to Emilia, and committed to the charge of Pipes, who was ordered to set out for Mrs Gauntlet's habitation with a present of venison, and a compliment to the ladies; and directed to take some opportunity of delivering the letter to miss, without the knowledge of her mamma.

CHAP. XIX.

His messenger meets with a misfortune, to which he applies a very extraordinary expedient that is attended with strange consequences.

A S a stage coach passed within two miles of the village where she lived, Tom bargained with the driver for a feat on the box, and accordingly departed on this message, though he was but indifferently qualified for commissions of fuch a nature: having received particular injunctions about the letter, he refolved to make that the chief object of his care, and very fagaciously conveyed it between his stocking, and the fole of his foot, where he thought it would be perfectly fecure from all injury and accident. Here it remained until he arrived at the inn where he had formerly lodged, when after having refreshed himfelf with a draught of beer, he pulled off his flocking, and found the poor billet fullied with duft, and torn into a thousand tatters by the motion of his foot in walking the last two miles of his journey. Thunderstruck at this phænomenon, he uttered a long and loud whew! which was fucceeded by an exclamation of " Damn my old shoes! a bite by G-d!" then he rested his elbows on the table, and his forehead upon his two fifts, and in that attitude deliberated with himself upon the means of remedying this misfortune.

As he was not distracted by a vast number of ideas, he soon concluded that his best expedient would be to employ the clerk of the parish, who he knew was a great scholar, to write another epistle according to the directions he should give him; and never dreaming that the mangled original would in the least facilitate this scheme, he very wisely committed it to the slames, that it might never rise up in judgment against him.

Having taken this wife step, he went in quest of the scribe, to whom he communicated his bufiness, and promised a full pot by way of gratisication. The clerk, who was also schoolmaster, proud of an opportunity to distinguish his talents, readily undertook the task; and repairing with his employer to the inn, in less than a quarter of an hour produced a morfel of eloquence so much to the satisfaction of Pipes, that he squeezed his hand by way of acknowledgment, and doubled his allowance of beer. This being discussed, our courier betook himself to the house of Mrs Gauntlet with the haunch of venison and this succedaneous letter, and delivered his meffage to the mother, who received it with great respect, and many kind inquiries about the health and welfare of his master, attempting to tip the messenger a crown, which he absolutely refused to accept, in confequence of Mr Pickle's repeated caution. While the old gentlewoman turned to a fervant, in order to give directions about the disposal of the prefent, Pipes looked upon this as a favourable occasion to transact his business with Emilia, and therefore shutting one eye, with a jirk of his thumb towards his left shoulder, and a most significant twist of his countenance, he beckoned the young lady into another room, as if he had been fraught with fomething of consequence, which he wanted to impart. She understood the hint, howfoever strangely communicated, and by stepping to one fide of the room, gave him an oppor-VOL. I.

tunity of slipping the epistle into her hand, which he gently squeezed at the same time in token of regard: then throwing a side-glance at the mother whose back was turned, clapped his singer on the side of his nose, thereby recommending secrecy and discretion.

Emilia conveyed the letter into her bosom, could not help smiling at Tom's politeness and dexterity; but lest her mamma should detect him in the execution of his pantomime, she broke off this intercourse of figns, by asking aloud when he proposed to set out on his return to Winchester. When he answered, "To-morrow morning." Mrs Gauntlet recommended him to the hospitality of her own footman, defiring him to make much of Mr Pipes below, where he was kept to supper, and very cordially entertained. Our young heroine, impatient to read her lover's billet, which made her heart throb with rapturous expectation, retired to her chamber as foon as possible, with a view of perufing the contents, which were thefe:

Divine empress of my foul!

IF the refulgent flames of your beauty had not evaporated the particles of my transported brain, and scorched my intellects into a cinder of stolidity, perhaps the resplendency of my passion might shine illustrious through the sable curtain of my ink, and in sublimity transcend the galaxy itself, though wasted on the pinions of a grey goofe quill! But ah! celestial enchantress! the necromancy of thy tyrannical charms hath settered my faculties with adamantine chains, which unless thy compassion shall melt, I must eternally remain in the tartarean gulph of dismal dispair. Vouchsafe, therefore, O thou brightest luminary of this terrestrial sphere! to warm as well as shine; and let the genial rays of thy benevolence melt the iey-emanations of thy disdain, which hath frozen up the spirits of, angelic preheminence! thy most egregious admirer and superlative slave,

PEREGRINE PICKLE.

Never was aftonishment more perplexing than that of Emilia, when she read this curious composition, which she repeated verbatim three times before the would credit the evidence of her own She began to fear in good earnest that love had produced a diforder in her lover's understanding; but after a thousand conjectures by which she attempted to account for this extraordinary fustain of style, she concluded that it was the effect of mere levity, calculated to ridicule the passion he had formerly professed. Irritated by this supposition, she resolved to baulk his triumph with affected indifference, and in the mean time endeavour to expel him from that place which he possessed within her heart. indeed, fuch a victory over her inclinations might have been obtained without great difficulty; for the enjoyed an easiness of temper that could accommodate itself to the emergencies of her fate; and her vivacity, by amusing her imagination, preserved her from the keener sensations of sorrow. Thus determined and disposed, she did not send any sort of answer, or the least token of remembrance by Pipes, who was suffered to depart with a general compliment from the mother, and arrived at Winchester the next day.

Peregrine's eyes sparkled when he saw his messenger come in, and he stretched out his hand in full confidence of receiving some particular mark of his Emilia's affection; but how was he confounded, when he found his hope fo cruelly disappointed? in an instant his countenance fell. He stood for some time silent and abashed, then thrice repeated the interrogation of "What! not one word from Emilia?" And dubious of his courier's discretion, inquired minutely into all the particulars of his reception. He asked if he had feen the young lady, if she was in good health, if he had found an opportunity of delivering his letter, and how she looked when he put it into her hand? Pipes answered, that he had never seen her in better health or higher spirits; that he had managed matters fo as not only to prefent the billet unperceived, but also to ask her commands in private before he took his leave, when she told him that the letter required no reply. This last circumstance he considered as a manifest mark of difrespect, and gnawed his lips with resentment. Upon farther reflection, however, he supposed that she could not conveniently write by the mesfenger, and would undoubtedly favour him by the post. This consideration consoled him for the present, and he waited impatiently for the fruits of his hope; but after he had feen eight days elapfed without reaping the fatisfaction with which he had flattered himself, his temper forsook him, he raved against the whole fex, and was seized with a fit of fullen chagiin; but his pride in a little time came to his assistance, and rescued himfrom the horrors of the melancholy fiend. resolved to retort her own neglect upon his ungrateful mistress, his countenance gradually refumed its former ferenity; and though by this time he was pretty well cured of his foppery, he appeared again at public diversions with an air of gaiety and unconcern, that Emilia might have a chance of hearing how much, in all liklihood, he difregarded her difdain.

There are never wanting certain officious perfons, who take pleasure in promoting intelligence of this fort. His behaviour soon reached the ears of Miss Gauntlet, and confirmed her in the opinion she had conceived from his letter; so that she fortified herself in her former sentiments, and bore his indifference with great philosophy. Thus a correspondence which had commenced with all the tenderness and sincerity of love, and every promise of duration, was interrupted in its infancy by a misunderstanding occasioned by the fimplicity of Pipes, who never once reflected upon the consequences of his deceit.

Though their mutual passion was by these means suppressed for the present, it was not altogether extinguished, but glowed in secret, though even to themfelves unknown, until an occafion which afterwards offered, blew up the latent flame, and love refumed his empire in their breafts.

While they moved, as it were, without the sphere of each other's attraction, the commodore fearing that Perry was in danger of involving himself in some pernicious engagement, resolved by advice of Mr Jolter and his friend the parish priest, to recal him from the place where he had contracted fuch imprudent connexions, and fend him to the university, where his education might be compleated, and his fancy weaned from all puerile amusements.

This plan had been proposed to his own father, who, as hath been already observed, stood always neuter in every thing that concerned his eldest fon: and as for Mrs Pickle, she had never heard his name mentioned fince his departure with any degree of temper or tranquillity, except when the husband informed her that he was in a fair way of being ruined by this indifcreet amour. was then she began to applaud her own forefight. which had discerned the mark of reprobation in that vicious boy, and launched out in comparisons between him and Gammy, who she observed, was a child of uncommon parts and folidity, and with the bleffing of God, would be a comfort to his parents, and an ornament to the family.

Should I affirm that this favourite whom she commended so much, was in every respect the reverse of what she described; that he was a boy of mean capacity, and though remarkably distorted in his body, much more crooked in his disposition; and that she had persuaded her husband to espouse her opinion, though it was contrary to common sense, as well as to his own perception; I am afraid the reader will think I represent a monster that never existed in nature, and be apt to condemn the economy of my invention; nevertheless, there is nothing more true than every circumstance of what I have advanced; and I wish the picture, singular as it is, may not be thought to resemble more than one original.

CHAP. XX.

Peregrine is summoned to attend his uncle, is more and more hated by his own mother; appeals to his father, whose condescension is defeated by the daminion of his wife.

BUT waving these restections, let us return to Peregrine, who received a summons to attend his uncle, and in a few days arrived with Mr Jolter and Pipes at the garrison, which he filled with joy and satisfaction. The alteration which, during his absence, had happened in his person, was very favourable to his appearance, which from that of a comely boy, was converted into that of a most engaging youth. He was already taller than a middle-fized man, his shape ascertained, his sinnews well knit, his mein greatly improved, and his whole figure as elegant and graceful, as it had been cast in the same mould with the Apollo of Belvidere.

Such an outside could not fail of prepossessing people in his favour. The commodore, not-withstanding the advantageous reports he had heard, found his expectation exceeded in the person of Peregrine, and signified his approbation in the most sanguine terms. Mrs Trunnion was struck with his genteel address, and received him with uncommon marks of complacency and affection; he was caressed by all the people in the neighbourhood, who, while they admired his accomplishments, could not help pitying his infatuated mother for being deprived of that unutterable delight which any other parent would have enjoyed in the contemplation of such an amiable son.

Divers efforts were made by some well-disposed people, to conquer, if possible, this monstrous prejudice; but their endeavours, instead of curing, served only to instame the distemper, and she never could be prevailed upon to indulge him with the least mark of maternal regard. On the contrary, her original disgust degenerated into fuch inveteracy of hatred, that she left no stone unturned to alienate the commodore's affection for this her innocent child, and even practised the most malicious defamation to accomplish her purpose. Every day did she abuse her husband's ear with some forged instance of Peregrine's ingratitude to his uncle, well knowing that it would reach the commodore's knowledge at night.

Accordingly Mr Pickle used to tell him at the club, that his hopeful favourite had ridiculed him in fuch a company, and aspersed his spouse upon another occasion; and thus retail the little scandalous iffue of his own wife's invention. Luckily for Peregrine, the commodore paid no great regard to the authority of his informer, because he knew from what canal his intelligence flowed; besides, the youth had a staunch friend in Mr Hatchway, who never failed to vindicate him when he was thus unjustly accused, and always found argument enough to confute, the affertions of his enemies. But, though Trunnion had been dubious of the young gentleman's principles, and deaf to the remonstrances of the lieutenant, Perry was provided with a bulwark strong enough to defend him from all fuch affaults. This was no other than his aunt, whose regard for him was perceived to increase in the same proportion as his own mother's diminished; and indeed, the augmentation of the one was, in all probability, owing to the decrease of the other; for the two ladies, with great civility, performed all the duties of good neighbourhood, and hated each other most piously in their hearts.

Mrs Pickle having been disobliged at the splendor of her fifter's new equipage, had ever fince that time, in the course of her visiting, endeavoured to make people merry with fatirical jokes on the poor lady's infirmities; and Mrs Trunnion feized the very first opportunity of making reprifals, by inveighing against her unnatural behaviour to her own child; fo that Peregrine, as on the one hand he was abhorred, fo on the other was he careffed in confequence of this contention; and I firmly believe, that the most effectual method of destroying his interest at the garrifon, would have been the shew of countenancing him at his father's house; but whether this conjecture be reasonable or chimerical, certain it is . the experiment was never tried; and therefore, Mr Peregrine ran no risk of being disgraced. The commodore, who assumed, and justly too, the whole merit of his education, was now as proud of the youth's improvements, as if he had actually been his own offspring; and fometimes his affection rose to such a pitch of enthusiasm, that he verily believed him to be the very iffue of his Notwithstanding this favourable own loins. predicament in which our hero flood with his aunt and her husband, he could not help feeling the injury he fuffered from the caprice of his mother; and though the gaity of his disposition hindered him from afflicting himself with reflections of any gloomy cast, he did not fail to forsee that if any sudden accident should deprive him of the commodore, he would in all liklihood find himself in a very disagreeable situation. Prompted by this consideration, he one evening accompanied his uncle to the club, and was introduced to his father, before that worthy gentleman had the least inkling of his arrival.

Mr Gamaliel was never fo disconcerted as at this reincounter. His own disposition would not fuffer him to do any thing that might create the least disturbance, or interrupt his evening's enjoyment; fo strongly was he impressed with the terror of his wife, that he durst not yield to the tranquillity of his temper: and, as I have already obferved, his inclination was perfectly neutral. Thus distracted between different motives, when Perry was presented to him, he sat filent and absorpt. as if he did not or would not perceive the application; and when he was urged to declare himfelf by the youth, who pathetically begged to know how he had incurred his displeasure, he answered in a peevish strain. "Why, good now, child, what would you have me to do? your mother can't abide you." " If my mother is fo unkind, I will not call it unnatural, (faid Peregrine, the tears of indignation starting from his eyes) as to banish me from her presence and affection, without the least cause assigned; I hope you will not be so unjustas to espouse her barbarous prejudice." Before Mr Pickle had time to reply to this expostulation, for which he was not at all prepared, the commodore interposed, and enforced his favourite's remonstrance, by telling Mr Gamaliel that he was ashamed to see any man drive in such a miserable manner under his wife's petticoat. " As for my own part, (faid he, raising his voice, and affuming a look of importance and command) before I would fuffer myfelf to be steered all weathers by any woman in Christendom, d'ye see, I'd raise such a hurricane about her ears that"-Here he was interrupted by Mr Hatchway, who thrusting his head towards the door, in the attitude of one that liftens, cried "Ahey! there's your spouse come to pay us a visit." Trunnion's features that instant adopted a new disposition: fear and confusion took possession of his countenance, his voice from a tone of vociferation funk into a whisper of "Sure you must be mistaken, Jack;" and in great perplexity he wiped off the fweat which had started on his forehead at this false alarm. The lieutenant having thus punished him for the rhodomontade he had uttered, told him with an arch fneer, that he was deceived by the found of the outward door creaking upon its hinges, which he mistook for Mrs Trunnion's voice, and defired him to proceed with his admonitions to Mr Pickle. It is not to be denied that this arrogance was a little unfeafonable in the commodore, who was in all respects as effectually fubdued to the dominion of his wife, as the perfon whose submission he then ventured to condomn; with this difference of disposition: Trunnion's subjection was like that of a bear, chequered with fits of surliness and rage; whereas Pickle bore the yoke like an ox, without repining. No wonder then that this indolence, this sluggishness, this stagnation of temper, rendered Gamaliel incapable of withstanding the arguments and importunity of his friends, to which he at length surrendered. He acquiesced in the justice of their observations; and taking his son by the hand, promised to favour him for the suture with his love and fatherly protection.

But this laudable resolution did not last; Mrs Pickle still dubious of his constancy, and jealous of his communication with the commodore, never failed to interrogate him every nigh tabout the conversation that happened at the club; and regulate her exhortations according to the intelligence she received. He was no sooner therefore fafely conveyed to bed, (that academy in which all notable wives communicate their lectures) when her catechism began; and she in a moment perceived fomething reluctant and equivocal in her Aroused at this discovery, husband's answers. the employed her influence and skill with such fuccess, that he disclosed every circumstance of what had happened; and after having sustained a most severe rebuke for his simplicity and indiscretion, humbled himfelf fo far as to promife that he would next day annul the condescensions he had made, and for ever renounce the ungracious object of her difgust. This undertaking was punctually performed in a letter to the commodore, which she herself dictated in these words.

VOL. I.

SIR,

Whereas my good-nature being last night imposed upon, I was persuaded to countenance and promise I know not what to that vicious youth, whose parent I have the missortune to be; I desire you will take notice that I revoke all such countenance and promises, and shall never look upon that man as my friend, who will henceforth in such a cause solicit,

Sir, yours, &c.

GAM. PICKLE.

CHAP. XXI.

Trunnion is enraged at the conduct of Pickle. Pegrine refents the injustice of his mother, to whom he explains his sentiments in a letter. Is entered at the University of Oxford, where he signalizes hemself as a youth of an enterprising genius.

Which Trunnion was incenfed by this abfurd renunciation: he tore the letter with his gums, (teeth he had none) spit with furious grimaces, in token of the contempt he entertained for the author, whom he not only damned as a loufy, feabby, nafty, feurvy, feulking, lubberly noodle, but refolved to challenge to fingle combat with fire and fword; but he was diffuaded from this violent measure, and appealed by the intervention and advice of the lieutenant and Mr Jolter, who represented the message as the essect of the poor man's infirmity, for which he was rather an object of pity than of resentment; and turned the stream of his indignation against the wife, whom he reviled accordingly. Nor did Peregrine himself, bear with patience this injurious declaration, the nature of which he no fooner understood from Hatchway, than equally shocked and exasperated, he retired to his apartment, and in the first emotions of his ire, produced the following epiftle, which was immediately conveyed to his mother.

MADAM,

HAD nature formed me a bugbear to the fight, and inspired me with a soul as vicious as my body was detestable, perhaps I might have enjoyed particular marks of your affection and applause; seeing you have persecuted me with such unnatural aversion, for no other visible reason than that of my differing so widely in shape as well as disposition, from that deformed urchin who is the object of your tenderness and care. If those be the terms on which alone I can obtain your favour, I pray God you may never cease to hate,

Madam,
Your most injured son,
PERLGRINE PICKLE.

This letter, which nothing but his paffion and inexperience could excuse, had such an effect upon his mother, as may be easily conceived. She was enraged to a degree of frenzy against the writer: though at the same time she considered the whole as the production of Mrs Trunnion's particular pique, and represented it to her hufband as an infult that he was bound in honour to refent, by breaking off all correspondence with the commodore and his family. This was a bitter pill to Gamaliel, who, through a long course of years, was so habituated to Trunnion's company, that he could as eafily have parted with a limb, as have relinquished the club all at once. He therefore ventured to represent his own incapacity to follow her advice, and begged that he might at least be allowed to drop the connexion gradually; protesting that he would do his endeavour to give all manner of fatisfaction.

Mean while preparations were made for Peregrine's departure to the university; and in a few weeks he set out in the seventeenth year of his age, accompanied by the same attendants who lived with him at Winchester. His uncle laid strong injunctions upon him to avoid the company of immodest women, to mind his learning, to let him hear of his welfare as often as he could fpare time to write, and fettled his appointments at the rate of five hundred a-year, including his. governor's falary, which was one fifth part of the The heart of our young gentleman dilated at the prospect of the figure he should make with fuch an handsome annuity, the management of which was left at his own discretion: and he amused his imagination with the most agreeable reveries during his journey to Oxford, which he performed in two days. Here being introduced to the head of the college, to whom he had been recommended, accommodated with genteel apartments, entered as gentleman commoner in the books, and provided with a judicious tutor, inflead of returning to the fludy of Greek and Latin, in which he thought himself already sufficiently instructed; he renewed his acquaintance with some of his old school-fellows, whom he found in the same situation, and was by them initiated in all the fashionable diversions of the place.

It was not long before he made himself remarkable for his spirit and humour, which were so acceptable to the bucks of the university, that he was admitted as a member of their corporation, and in a very little time became the most conspicuous personage of the whole fraternity; not that he valued himself upon his ability in smoking the greatest number of pipes, and drink-lifications of too gross a nature to captivate his refined ambition. He piqued himself on his talent for raillery, his genius and taste, his personal accomplishments, and his success at intrigue: nor were his excursions confined to the small villages in the neighbourhood, which are commonly visited once a week by the students for the sake of carnal recreation. He kept his own horses, traversed the whole country in parties of pleasure, attended all the races within fifty miles of Oxford, and made frequent jaunts to London, where he used to lie incognito during the best part of many a term.

The rules of the university were too severe to be observed by a youth of his vivacity; and, therefore, he became acquainted with the proctor, by times. But all the checks he received were insufficient to moderate his career; he frequented taverns and coffee-houses, committed midnight frolics in the streets, insulted all the sober and pacific class of his fellow-students; the tutors themselves were not sacred from his ridicule; he laughed at the magistrate, and neglected every particular of college discipline.

In vain did they attempt to restrain his irregularities by the imposition of sines; he was liberal to profusion; and, therefore, paid without reluctance. Thrice did he scale the windows of a tradesman, with whose daughter he had an affair of gallantry, as often was he obliged to seek his fafety by a precipitate leap, and one night would in all probability have fallen a facrifice to an ambuscade that was laid by the father, had not his trusty squire Pipes interposed in his behalf, and manfully rescued him from the clubs of his enemies.

In the midst of these excesses, Mr Joster finding his admonitions neglected, and his influence utterly destroyed, attempted to wean his pupil from his extravagant courses, by engaging his attention in some more laudable pursuit. With this view he introduced him into a club of politicians, who received him with great demonstrations of regard, accommodated themselves more than he could have expected to his jovial disposition; and while they revolved schemes for the resormation of the state, drank with such devotion to the accomplishment of their plans, that before parting, the cares of their patriotism were quite overwhelmed.

Peregrine, though he could not approve of their doctrine, refolved to attach himself for some time to their company; because, he perceived ample subject for his ridicule, in the characters of these wrong-headed enthusiasts. It was a constant practice with them, in their midnight consistories, to swallow such plentiful draughts of inspiration, that their mysteries commonly ended like those of the Bacchanalian Orgia; and they were seldom capable of maintaining that solemnity of decorum which by the nature of their functions most of them were obliged to profess. Now as Peregrine's fatirical disposition was never more gratified than when he had an opportunity of exposing grave characters in ridiculous attitudes, he laid a mifchievous fnare for his new confederates, which took effect in this manner. In one of their nocturnal deliberations, he promoted fuch a spirit of goodfellowship, by the agreeable fallies of his wit, which were purposely levelled against their political adverfaries, that by ten o'clock they were all ready to join in the most extravagant proposal that could be made. They broke their glasses in confequence of his fuggestions, drank healths out of their shoes, caps, and the bottoms of the candleflicks that stood before them, sometimes standing with one foot on a chair, and the knee bent on the edge of the table; and when they could no longer stand in that posture, setting their bare pofteriors on the cold floor. They huzza'd, hallooed, danced and fung, and in fhort were elevated to fuch a pitch of intoxication, that when Peregrine proposed that they should burn their periwigs, the hint was immediately approved, and they executed the frolic as one man. Their shoes and caps underwent the same fate by the same infligation; and in this trim he led them forth into the street, where they resolved to compel every body they should find to subscribe to their political creed, and pronounce the Shiboleth of their party. In the atchievement of this enterprise, they met with more opposition than they expected; they were encountered with arguments which they could not well withftand; the nofes of fome, and eyes of others, in a very little time bore the marks of obstinate disputation. Their conductor having at length engaged the whole body in a fray with another fquadron which was pretty much in the same condition, he very fairly gave them the flip, and flily retreated to his apartment, forefeeing that his companions would foon be favoured with the notice of their superiors. Nor was he deceived in his prognostic; the proctor going his round, chanced to fall in with this tumultuous uproar, and interposing his authority, found means to quiet the disturbance. He took cognizance of their names, and dismissed the rioters to their respective chambers, not a little scandalized at the behaviour of some among them, whose business and duty it was to fet far other examples to the youth under their care and direction.

About midnight, Pipes, who had orders to attend at a distance, and keep an eye upon Jolter, brought home that unfortunate governor upon his back (Peregrine having before-hand secured his admittance into the college) and among other bruises he was found to have received a couple of contusions on his face, which next morning appeared in a black circle that surrounded each eye. This was a mortifying circumstance to a man of his character and deportment, especially as he had received a message from the proctor, who desired to see him forthwith. With great humility and contrition he begged the advice of his pupil, who being used to amuse himself with painting, affured Mr Jolter, that he would cover those signs of difgrace with a slight coat of flesh colour, fo dexteroufly, that it would be almost impossible to distinguish the artificial from the natural skin. The rueful governor, rather than expose such opprobrious tokens to the observation and cenfure of the magistrate, submitted to the expedient. Although his counfellor had overrated his own skill, he was perfuaded to confide in the difguife, and actually attended the proctor, with fuch a staring addition to the natural ghastliness of his features, that his visage bore a very apt refemblance to some of those ferocious countenances that hang over the doors of certain taverns and alehouses, under the denomination of the Saracen's head.

Such a remarkable alteration of physiognomy could not escape the notice of the most undiscerning beholder, much less the penetrating eye of his severe judge, already whetted with what he had seen over night. He was, therefore, upbraided with his ridiculous and shallow artifice, and, together with the companions of his debauch, underwent such a cutting reprimand for the scandalous irregularity of their conduct, that all of them remained crest-fallen, and were ashamed, for many weeks, to appear in the public execution of their duty.

Peregrine was too vain of his finesse, to conceal the part he acted in this comedy, with the particulars of which he regaled his companions, and thereby entailed upon himself the hate and resentment of the community, whose maxims and practices he had disclosed; for he was considered as a spy, who had intruded himself into their society with a view of betraying it; or, at best, as an apostate and renegado from the faith and principles which he had professed.

CHAP. XXII.

He is insulted by his tutor, whom he lampoons; makes consider able progress in polite literature; and in an excursion to Windsor, meets with Emilia by accident, and is very coldly received.

A MONG those who suffered by his craft and infidelity was Mr Jumble his own tutor, who could not at all digest the mortifying affront he had received, and was resolved to be revenged on the insulting author. With this view he watched the conduct of Mr Pickle with the utmost rancour of vigilance, and let slip no opportunity of treating him with disrespect, which he knew the disposition of his pupil could less brook than any other severity it was in his power to exercise.

Peregrine had been feveral mornings absent from chapel; and as Mr Jumble never failed to question him in a very peremptory style about his non-attendance, he invented some very plausible excuses; but, at length his ingenuity was exhausted; he received a very galling rebuke for his profligacy of morals; and that he might feel it the more sensibly, was ordered by way of exercise, to compose a paraphrase in English verse, upon these two lines in Virgil.

Vane ligur, frustraque animis elate superbis, Necquicquam, patrias, tentasti lubricus, artes.

The imposition of this invidious theme had all the desired effect upon Peregrine, who not only considered it as a piece of unmannerly abuse levelled against his own conduct, but also as a retrospective insult on the memory of his grandfather, who (as he had been informed) was in his life-time more noted for his cunning than candour in trade.

Exasperated at this instance of the pedant's audacity, he had well-nigh (in his first transports) taken corporal satisfaction on the spot; but fore-seeing the troublesome consequences that would attend such a slagrant outrage against the laws of the university, he checked his indignation, and resolved to revenge the injury in a more cool and contemptuous manner. Thus determined, he set on soot an inquiry into the particulars of Jumble's parentage and education. He learnt that the father of this infolent tutor was a bricklayer, that his mother fold pyes, and that the fon, at different periods of his youth, had amused himfelf in both occupations, before he converted his views to the study of learning. Fraught with this intelligence, he composed the following ballad in doggerel rhymes, and next day presented it as a gloss upon the text which the tutor had chosen.

T.

Come listen ye students of ev'ry degree,

I sing of a wit and a tutor perdie,

A statesman profound, a critic immense,

In short, a mere jumble of learning and sense;

And yet of his talents, though laudably vain,

His own family arts he could never attain.

II.

His father intending his fortune to build, In his youth would have taught him the trowel to wield.

But the mortar of discipline never would stick, For his skull was secur'd by a facing of brick, And with all his endeavours of patience and pain,

The skill of his fire he could never attain.

III.

His mother an housewise neat, artful and wise, Renown'd for her delicate bisquit and pyes. Soon alter'd his studies, by flatt'ring his taste, From the raising of wall to the rearing of paste! Vol. I

194 THE ADVENTURES OF

But all her instructions were fruitless and vain, The pye-making myst'ry he ne'er could attain.

Yet true to his race, in his labours were feen A jumble of both their professions, I ween; For when his own genius he ventur'd to trust, His pyes seemed of brick, and his houses of crust.

Then, good Mr Tutor, pray be not so vain, Since your family arts you could never attain.

This imprudent production was the most effectual vengeance he could have taken on his tutor, who had all the fupercilious arrogance and ridiculous pride of a low born pedant. Instead of overlooking this petulant piece of fatire with that temper and decency of difdain that became a person of his gravity and station, he no sooner cast his eye over the performance, than the blood rushed into his countenance, which immediately after exhibited a ghaftly pale colour. With a quivering lip he told his pupil that he was an impertinent jack-anapes, and he would take care that he should be expelled from the university, for having prefumed to write and deliver fuch a licentious and fcurrilous libel. Peregrine answered with great refolution, that when the provocation he had received should be known, he was perfuaded that he should be acquitted by the opinion of all impartial people; and that he was ready to submit the whole to the decision of the master.

This arbitration he proposed, because he knew the master and Jumble were at variance; and for that reason the tutor durst not venture to put the cause on such an issue. Nay, when this reference was mentioned, Jumble, who was naturally jealous, suspected that Peregrine had a promife of protection, before he undertook to commit fuch an outrageous infult; and this notion had fuch an effect upon him, that he resolved to devour his vexation, and wait for a more proper opportunity of gratifying his hate. Mean while copies of the ballad were distributed among the students, who sung it under the very nose of Mr Jumble, to the tune of A cobler there was, &c. and the triumph of our hero was compleat. Neither was his whole time devoted to the riotous extravagancies of youth. He enjoyed many lucid intervals, during which he contracted a more intimate acquaintance with the classicks, applied himself to the reading of history, improved his taste for painting and music, in which he made fome progress; and above all things, cultivated the study of natural philosophy. It was generally after a course of close attention to some of these arts and sciences, that his disposition broke out into these irregularities and wild fallies of a luxuriant imagination, for which he became fo remarkable; and he was perhaps the only young man in Oxford, who at the same time maintained an intimate and friendly intercourse with the most unthinking, as well as with the most sedate students at the university.

It is not to be supposed that a young man of Peregrine's vanity, inexperience and profusion, could fuit his expence to his allowance, liberal as it was; for he was not one of those fortunate people who were born oeconomists, and knew not the art of with-holding his purse when he faw his companion in difficulty. Thus naturally generous and expensive, he squandered away his money, and made a most splendid appearance upon the receipt of his quarterly appointment; but long before the third month was elapfed, his finances were confumed; and as he could not stoop to ask an extraordinary supply, was too proud to borrow, and too haughty to run in debt with tradefmen, he devoted those periods of poverty to the profecution of his studies, and shone forth again at the revolution of quarter-day.

In one of these irruptions he and some of his companions went to Windsor, in order to see the royal apartments in the castle, whither they repaired in the afternoon; and as Peregrine stood contemplating the picture of Hercules and Omphale, one of his fellow-students whispered in his ear, "Z—ds! Pickle, there are two sine girls." He turned instantly about, and in one of them recognized his almost forgotten Emilia: her appearance acted upon his imagination like a spark of sire that falls among gunpowder; that passion which had lain dormant for the space of two years flashed up in a moment, and he was feized with an universal trepidation. She perceived and partook of his emotion; for their. fouls, like unifons, vibrated with the fame impulse. However, she called her pride and refentment to her aid, and found resolution enough to retire from such a dangerous scene. Alarmed at this retreat, he recollected all his affurance, and impelled by love, which he could no longer refift, followed her into the next room, where in the most disconcerted manner, he accosted her with "Your humble fervant, Miss Gauntlet;" to which falutation the replied with an affectation of indifference that did not, however, conceal her agitation, "Your servant Sir;" and immediately extending her finger towards the picture of Duns Scotus, which is fixed over one of the doors, asked her companion in a gigling tone, if she did not think he looked like a conjurer." Peregrine, nettled into spirits by this reception, answered for the other lady, " that it was an eafy matter to be a conjurer in those times, when the simplicity of the age assisted his divination; but were he, or Merlin himself, to rife from the dead now, when fuch deceit and diffimulation prevail, they would not be able to earn their bread by the profession." "-O! Sir, faid she (turning full upon him) without doubt they would adopt new maxims; 'tis no disparagement in this enlightened age for one to alter one's opinion." " No fure, Madam, replied the youth with some precipitation, provided the change be for the better:" " And should it happen otherwise, retorted the nymph with a flirt of her fan, inconstancy will never want countenance from the practice of mankind." " True, Madam, refumed our hero fixing his eyes upon her; examples of levity are every where to be met with." " O Lord, Sir, cried Emilia, toffing her head, you'll scarce ever find a fop without it." By this time his companion feeing him engaged with one of the ladies, entered into conversation with the other; and in order to favour his friend's gallantry, conducted her into the next apartment, on pretence of entertaining her with the fight of a remarkable piece of painting.

Peregrine laying hold on this opportunity of being alone with the object of his love, affumed a most seducing tenderness of look, and heaving a profound figh, asked, if she had utterly discarded him from her remembrance. Reddening at this pathetic question, which recalled the memory of the imagined flight he had put upon her, fhe anfwered in great confusion, "Sir, I believe I once had the pleasure of seeing you at a ball in Winchester." "Miss Emilia, said he, very gravely, will you be fo candid as to tell me what mifbehaviour of mine you are pleased to punish, by restricting your remembrance to that fingle occafion?" " Mr Pickle, she replied in the same tone, it is neither my province nor inclination to judge your conduct; and, therefore, you misapply your question when you ask such an explanation of me." " At least, resumed our lover, give me the melancholy fatisfaction to know for what offence of mine, you refused to take the least notice of that letter which I had the honour to write from Winchester by your own express permission." "Your letter, faid Miss with great vivacity, neither required, nor, in my opinion, deserved an answer; and to be free with you, Mr Pickle, it was but a shallow artifice to rid yourself of a correspondence you had deigned to folicit." Peregrine, confounded at this repartee, replied, that howfoever he might have failed in point of elegance or discretion, he was sure he had not been deficient in expressions of respect and devotion for those charms which it was his pride to adore: " As for the verses, said he, I own they were unworthy of the theme, but I flattered myself that they would have merited your acceptance, though not your approbation, and been confidered not so much as the proof of my genius, as the genuine effusion of my love." "Verfes! cried Emilia with an air of aftonishment, what verses? I really don't understand you." The young gentleman was thunderstruck at this exclamation, to which, after a long pause, he answered, " I begin to sufpect, and heartily wish it may appear that we have misunderstood each other from the beginning. Pray, Miss Gauntlet, did not you find a copy of verses inclosed in that unfortunate letter?" "Truly, Sir, (faid the lady) I am not fo much of a conproduction which you merrily style an unfortunate letter was composed in verse or prose; but, methinks, the jest is a little too stale to be brought upon the carpet again." So saying, she tripped away to her companion, and lest her lover in a most tumultuous suspence. He now perceived that her neglect of his addresses, when he was at Winchester, must have been owing to some mystery which he could not comprehend; and she began to suspect and to hope that the letter which she received was spurious, though she could not conceive how that could possibly happen, as it had been delivered to her by the hands of his own fervant.

However, she resolved to leave the task of unravelling the affair to him, who, she knew, would infallibly exert himself for his own as well as her fatisfaction. She was not deceived in her opinion; he went up to her again at the stair-case, and as they were unprovided with a male attendant, infifted upon fquiring the ladies to their lodgings. Emilia faw his drift, which was no other than to know where she lived; and though she approved of his contrivance, thought it was incumbent upon her, for the support of her own dignity, to decline his civility: fhe, therefore, thanked him for his polite offer, but would by no means confent to his giving himself such unnecessary trouble, especially as they had a very little way to walk. He was. not repulsed by this refusal, the nature of which he perfectly understood; nor was she forry to see him persevere in his determination; he, therefore, accompanied them in their return, and made divers efforts to speak with Emilia in particular; but she had a spice of the coquette in her disposition, and being determined to whet his impatience, artfully baffled all his endeavours, by keeping her companion continually engaged in the conversation, which turned upon the venerable appearance and imperial fituation of the place. Thus tantalized, he lounged with them to the door of the house in which they lodged, when his mistress perceiving by the countenance of her comrade, that she was on the point of defiring him to walk in, checked her intention with a frown, then turning to Mr Pickle, dropped him a very formal curt'fy, feized the other young lady by the arm, and faying, " Come, coufin Sophy," vanished in a moment.

CHAP. XXIII.

After fundry unsuccessful efforts, he finds means to come to an explanation with his mistress; and a reconciliation ensues.

Peregrine, disconcerted at their sudden disappearance, stood for some minutes gaping in the street, before he could get the better of his surprise; and then deliberated with himself whether he should demand immediate admittance to his mistress, or choose some other method of application. Piqued at her abrupt behaviour, though pleased with her spirit, he set his invention to work, in order to contrive some means of feeing her; and in a fit of musing arrived at the inn, where he found his companions whom he had left at the castle-gate. They had already made inquiry about the ladies, in confequence of which he learnt that Miss Sophy was daughter of a gentleman in town to whom his mistress was related; that an intimate friendship sublisted between the two young ladies; that Emilia had lived about a month with her cousin, and appeared at the last affembly where she was universally admired; and that feveral young gentlemen of fortune had fince that time teized her with addreffes.

Our hero's ambition was flattered, and his passion instanced with this intelligence; and he swore within himself that he would not quit the spot until he should have obtained an indisputed victory over all his rivals.

That same evening he composed a most eloquent epistle, in which he earnestly entreated that she would favour him with an opportunity of vindicating his conduct; but she would neither receive his billet nor see his messenger. Baulked in this effort, he inclosed it in a new cover directed by another hand, and ordered Pipes to ride next morning to London, on purpose to deliver it at the post-office; that coming by fuch conveyance, she might have no suspicion of the author, and open it before she should be aware of the deceit.

Three days he waited patiently for the effect of this stratagem, and in the afternoon of the sourth, ventured to hazard a formal visit, in quality of an old acquaintance. But here too he sailed in his attempt, she was indisposed and could not see company. These obstacles served only to increase his eagerness; he still adhered to his former resolution; and his companions understanding his determination, lest him next day to his own inventions. Thus relinquished to his own ideas, he doubled his assiduity, and practised every method his imagination could suggest, in order to promote his plan.

Pipes was stationed all day long within sight of her door, that he might be able to give his master an account of her motions; but she never went abroad, except to visit in the neighbourhood, and was always housed before Peregrine could be apprised of her appearance. He went to church with a view of attracting her notice, and humbled his deportments before her; but she was so mischievously devout as to look at nothing but her book, so that he was not favoured with one glance of regard. He frequented the cossee house, and attempted to contract an acquaintance with Miss Sophy's father, who, he hoped, would invite him to his house; but this expectation was also defeated. That prudent gentleman looked upon him as one of those forward fortune-hunters who go about the country seeking whom they may devour, and warily discouraged all his advances. Chagrined by so many unsuccessful endeavours, he began to despair of accomplishing his aim, and, as the last suggestion of his art, paid off his lodging, took horse at noon, and departed, in all appearance, for the place from whence he had come. He rode, however, but a few miles, and in the dusk of the evening returned unseen, alighted at another inn, ordered Pipes to stay within doors, and keeping himself incognito, employed another perfon as a centinel upon Emilia.

It was not long before he reaped the fruits of his ingenuity. Next day in the afternoon he was informed by his fpy, that the two young ladies were gone to walk in the park, whither he followed them on the instant, fully determined to come to an explanation with his mistress even in presence of her friend, who might possibly be prevailed upon to interest herself in his behalf.

When he saw them at such a distance that they could not return to town before he should have an opportunity of putting his resolution in practice, he mended his pace, and sound means to appear before them so suddenly, that Emilia could not help expressing her surprise in a scream. Our lover putting on a mien of humility, and mortiscation, begged to know if her resentment was implacable; and asked why she had so cruelly refused to grant him the common privilege that cvery criminal enjoyed. "Dear Miss Sophy, faid he, addressing himself to her companion, give me leave to implore your intercession with your coufin; I am fure you have humanity enough to efpouse my cause, did you but know the justice of it ; and I flatter myfelf, that by your kind interpolition, I may be able to rectify that fatal mifunderstanding which hath made me wretched." "Sir, faid Sophy, you appear like a gentleman, and I doubt not but your behaviour has been always fuitable to your appearance; but you must excuse me from undertaking any such office in behalf of a person whom I have not the honour to know." " Madam, answered Peregrine, I hope Miss Emy will justify my pretensions to that character, notwithstanding the mystery of her displeasure, which upon my honour I cannot for my foul explain." "Lord! Mr Pickle, faid Emilia, (who had by this time recollected herself) I never questioned your gallantry and taste, but I am refolved that you shall never have cause to exercise your talents at my expence; so that you tease yourfelf and me to no purpose: come, Sophy, let us walk home again." "Good God! madam (cried the lover with great emotion) why will you distract me with such barbarous indifference? Stay, dear Emilia! I conjure you on my knees to stay and hear me: by all that is facred! I was not to blame; you must have been imposed upon VOL. I.

by fome villain who envied my good fortune, and took fome treacherous method to ruin my love."

Miss Sophy, who possessed a large stock of good nature, and to whom her coulin had communicated the cause of her reserve, seeing the young gentleman fo much affected with that difdain which she knew to be feigned, laid hold on Emilia's fleeve, faying with a fmile, " Not quite fo fast, Emily; I begin to perceive that this is a love quarrel, and therefore there may be hopes of a reconciliation; for I suppose both parties are open to conviction." " For my own part (cried Peregrine with great eagerness) I appeal to Miss Sophy's decision. But why do I so appeal? Tho' I am conscious of having committed no offence, I am ready to fubmit to any penance, let it be never fo rigorous, that my fair enflaver herfelf shall impose, provided it will intitle me to her favour and forgivenness at last." Emilia, well nigh overcome by this declaration, told him that as she taxed him with no guilt, the expected no atonement; and preffed her companion to return into town. But Sophy, who was too indulgent to her friend's real inclination to comply with her request, observed that the gentleman seemed so reasonable in his concessions, she began to think her cousin was in the wrong, and felt herfelf disposed to act as umpire in the dispute.

Overjoyed at this condescension, Mr Pickle thanked her in the most rapturous terms, and in the transport of his expectation, kissed the hand of his kind mediatrix; a circumstance which had a remarkable essect on the countenance of Emilia, who did not seem to relish the warmth of his acknowledgment.

After many supplications on one hand, and pressing remonstrances on the other, she yielded at length; and turning to her lover, while her face was overspread with blushes, "Well, Sir, (said she) supposing I were to put the difference on that issue, how could you excuse the ridiculous letter which you sent to me from Winchester?" This expostulation introduced a discussion of the whole affair, in which all the circumstances were canvassed; and Emilia still affirmed with great heat, that the letter must have been calculated to affront her; for she could not suppose the author was so weak as to design it for any other purpose.

Peregrine, who still retained in his memory the substance of this unlucky epistle, as well as the verses which were inclosed, could recollect no particular expression which could have justly given the least umbrage; and therefore in the agonies of perplexity, begged that the whole might be submitted to the judgment of Miss Sophy; and faithfully promised to stand to her award.

In short, this proposal was with seeming reluctance embraced by Emilia, and an appointment made to meet next day in the same place, whither both parties were desired to come provided with their credentials, according to which definitive sentence would be pronounced.

Our lover having succeeded this far, overwhelmed Sophy with acknowledgments on account of her generous mediation, and in the course of their walk, which Emilia was now in no hurry to conclude, whispered a great many tender protestations in the ear of his mistress, who nevertheless, continued to act upon the reserve, until her doubts should be more fully resolved.

Mr Pickle having found means to amuse them in the fields till the twilight, was obliged to wish them good even, after having obtained a solemn repetition of their promise to meet him at the appointed time and place; and then retreated to his apartment, where he spent the whole night in various conjectures on the subject of this letter, the gordian knot of which he could by no means untie.

One while he imagined that some wag had played a trick upon his messenger, in consequence of which Emilia had received a suppositious letter; but upon surther resection, he could not conceive the practicability of any such deceit. Then he began to doubt the sincerity of his mistress, who, perhaps, had only made that an handle for discarding him, at the request of some favourite rival; but his own integrity forbade him to harbour this mean suspicion; and, therefore, he was again involved in the labyrinth of perplexity. Next day he waited on the rack of impatience for the hour of five in the afternoon, which no fooner struck, than he ordered Pipes to attend him, in case there should be occasion for his evidence; and repaired to the place of rendezvous, where he had not tarried five minutes before the ladies appeared. Mutual compliments being paffed, and the attendant stationed at a convenient distance, Peregrine persuaded them to fit down upon the grafs, under the shade of a fpreading oak, that they might be more at their ease; while he stretched himself at their feet, and defired that the paper on which his doom. depended might be examined. It was accordingly put into the hand of his fair arbitrefs, who read it immediately with an audible voice. The first two words of it were no sooner pronounced, than he started with great emotion, and raised himfelf upon his hand and knee, in which posture he listened to the rest of the sentence; then fprung upon his feet in the utmost astonishment, and glowing with refentment at the same time, exclaimed, "Hell and the devil! what's all that? Sure you make a jest of me, madam." " Pray, Sir, (faid Sophy) give me the hearing for a few moments, and then urge what you shall think proper in your own defence." Having thus cautioned him, she proceeded; but before she had finished one half of the performance, her gravity for look her, and she was seized with a violent fit of laughter, in which neither of the lovers could help joining, notwithstanding the resentment which at that instant prevailed in the breasts of both. The judge, however, in a little time, resumed her solemnity, and having read the remaining part of this curious epistle, all three continued staring at each other alternately for the space of half a minute, and then broke forth at the same instant in another paroxism of mirth. From this unanimous convulsion, one would have thought that both parties were extremely well pleased with the joke, yet this was by no means the case.

Emilia imagined that notwithstanding his affected furprife, her lover, in spite of himself, had renewed the laugh at her expence, and in fo doing, applauded his own unmannerly ridicule. This supposition could not fail of raising and reviving her indignation, while Peregrine highly refented the indignity with which he supposed himself treated, in their attempting to make him the dupe of fuch a grofs and ludicrous artifice. This being the fituation of their thoughts, their mirth was fucceeded by a mutual gloominess of aspect, and the judge addressing herself to Mr Pickle, asked if he had any thing to offer, why sentence should not be pronounced? " Madam, answered the culprit, I am forry to find myself so low in the opinion of your cousin, as to be thought car pable of being deceived by fuch a shallow contrivance." " Nay, Sir, faid Emil'a, the contrivance is your own, and I cannot help admiring your confidence in imputing it to me." "Upon my honour, Miss Emily, refumed our hero, you wrong my understanding as well as my love, in accusing me of having written such a filly impertinent performance; the very appearance and address of it is so unlike the letter which I did myfelf the honour to write, that I dare fay my man, even at this distance of time, will remember the difference." So faying, he extended his voice, and beckoned to Pipes, who immediately drew near. His miftress seemed to object to the evidence, by observing that, to be fure, Mr Pipes had his cue; when Peregine begging the would spare him the mortification of confidering him in fuch a dishonourable light, defired his valet to examine the outfide of the letter, and recollect if it was the same which he had delivered to Miss Gauntlet about two years ago. Pipes having taken a superficial view of it, pulled up his breeches, faying, " Mayhap it is, but we have made so many trips, and been in fo many creeks and corners fince that time, that I can't pretend to be certain; for I neither keep journal nor logbook of our proceedings." Emilia commended him for his candour, at the fame time darting a farcastic look at his master, as if the thought he had tampered with his fervant's integrity in vain; and Peregrine began to rave and curfe his fate for having subjected him to fuch mean fuspicion, attesting heaven and earth in the most earnest manner, that far from having composed and conveyed that stupid production, he had never feen it before, nor been privy to the least circumstance of the plan.

Pipes, now for the first time, perceived the mischief which he had occasioned, and moved with the transports of his master, for whom he had a most inviolable attachment, frankly declared he was ready to make oath that Mr Pickle had no hand in the letter which he delivered. All three were amazed at this confession, the meaning of which they could not comprehend. Peregrine, after some pause, leaped upon Pipes, and feizing him by the throat, exclaimed in an extafy of rage, " Rafcal! tell me this instant what became of the letter I intrufted to your care." The patient valet, half strangled as he was, fquirted a collection of tobacco juice out of one corner of his mouth, and with great deliberation replied, " Why burnt it, you wouldn't have me give the young woman a thing that shook all in the wind in tatters, would you?". The ladies interposed in behalf of the distressed squire, from whom, by dint of questions which he had neither art nor inclination to evade, they extorted an explanation of the whole affair.

Such ridiculous simplicity and innocence of intention appeared in the composition of his expedient, that even the remembrance of all the chagrin which it had produced, could not rouse their indignation, or enable them to resist a third eruption of laughter which they forthwith underwent.

Pipes was dismissed with many menacing injunctions, to beware of such conduct for the surve; Emilia stood with a consustion of joy and tenderness in her countenance; Peregrine's eyes kindled into rapture, and when Miss Sophy pronounced the sentence of reconciliation, advanced to his mistress, saying, "Truth is mighty, and will prevail;" then classing her in his arms, very impudently ravished a kiss, which she had not power to resuse. Nay, such was the impulse of his joy, that he took the same freedom with the lips of Sophy, calling her his kind mediatrix and guardian angel; and behaved with such extravagance of transport, as plainly evinced the servour and sincerity of his love.

I shall not pretend to repeat the tender proteftations that were uttered on one fide, or describe the bewitching glances of approbation with which they were received on the other; fusfice it to fay, that the endearing intimacy of their former connexion was instantly renewed, and Sophy, who congratulated them upon the happy termination of their quarrel, favoured with their mutual confidence. In consequence of this happy pacification, they deliberated upon the means of feeing each other often; and as he could not without some previous introductions visit her openly at the house of her relation, they agreed to meet every afternoon in the park till the next affembly, at which he would folicit her as a partner, and the be unengaged, in expectation of his request.

By this connexion he would be intitled to visit her next day, and thus an avowed correspondence would of course commence. This plan was actually put in execution, and attended with a circumstance which had well nigh produced some mischievous consequence, had not Peregrine's good fortune been superior to his discretion.

CHAP. XXIV.

He atchieves an adventure at the affembly, and quarrels with his governor.

A T the affembly, were no fewer than three gentlemen of fortune, who rivalled our lover in his passion for Emilia, and who severally begged the honour of dancing with her upon that occasion. She had excused herself to each, on pretence of a slight indisposition that she fore-faw would detain her from the ball, and desired they would provide themselves with other partners. Obliged to admit her excuse, they accordingly followed her advice; and after they had engaged themselves beyond the power of retracting, had the mortification to see her there unclaimed.

They in their turn made up to her, and expressed their surprise and concern at finding her in the assembly unprovided, after she had declined their invitation; but she told them that her cold had forfaken her fince she had the pleasure of seeing them, and that she would rely upon accident for a partner. Just as she had pronounced these words to the last of the three, Peregrine advanced as an utter stranger, bowed with great respect, told her he understood she was unengaged, and would think himself highly honoured in being accepted as her partner for the night; and he had the good fortune to succeed in his application.

As they were by far the handsomest and best accomplished couple in the room, they could not fail of attracting the notice and admiration of the spectators, which inflamed the jealousy of his three competitors, who immediately entered into a conspiracy against this gaudy stranger, whom, as their rival, they refolved to affront in public. Purfuant to the plan which they projected for this purpose, the first country dance was no fooner concluded, than one of them with his partner took place of Peregrine and his miftrefs, contrary to the regulation of the ball. Our lover imputing his behaviour to inadvertency, informed the gentleman of his mistake, and civilly defired he would rectify his error. The other told him, in an imperious tone, that he wanted none of his advice, and bade him mind his own affairs. Peregrine answered with some warmth, and infifted upon his right; a dispute commenced, high words enfued, in the course of which, our impetuous youth hearing himself reviled with the appellation of scoundrel, pulled off his antagonist's periwig, and slung it in his face. The ladies immediately shriek'd, the gentlemen interposed, Emilia was seized with a sit of trembling, and conducted to her seat by her youthful admirer, who begged pardon for having discomposed her, and vindicated what he had done, by representing the necessity he was under to resent the provocation he had received.

Though the could not help owning the justice of his plea, she was not the less concerned at the dangerous fituation in which he had involved himself, and in the utmost consternation and anxiety infifted upon going directly home: he could not refift her importunities; and her coufin being determined to accompany her, he efcorted them to their lodgings, where he wished them good night, after having, in order to quiet their apprehensions, protested that if his opponent was fatisfied, he should never take any step towards the profecution of the quarrel. Mean while the affembly-room became a fcene of tumult and uproar; the person who conceived himself injured, feeing Peregrine retire, struggled with his companions, in order to purfue and take fatisfaction of our hero, whom he loaded with terms of abuse, and challenged to fingle combat.

The director of the ball held a consultation with all the subscribers who were present, and it was determined by a majority of votes, that the two gentlemen who had occasioned the disturbance, should be desired to withdraw. This refolution being signified to one of the parties then present, he made some dissiculty of complying, but was persuaded to submit by his two confederates, who accompanied him to the street-door, where he was met by Peregrine on his return to the affembly.

This choleric gentleman, who was a country fquire, no fooner faw his rival, than he began to brandish his cudgel in a menacing posture, when our adventurous youth stepping back with one foot, laid his hand upon the hilt of his fword, which he drew half-way out of the scabbard. This attitude, and the fight of the blade which glistened by moon-light in his face, checked, in fome fort, the ardour of his affailant, who defired he would lay afide his toafter, and take a bout with him at equal arms. Peregrine, who was an expert cudgel-player, accepted the invitation: then changing weapons with Pipes who stood behind him, put himself in a posture of defence, and received the attack of his adversary, who struck at random without either skill or œconomy. Pickle could have beaten the cudgel out of his hand at the first blow, but as in that case he would have been obliged in honour to give immediate quarter, he resolved to discipline his antagonist without endeavouring to disable him, until he should be heartily fatisfied with the vengeance he had taken. With this view he returned the falute. and raised such a clatter about the squire's pate, VOL. I.

that one who had heard without feeing the application, would have mistaken the found for that of a falt-box, in the hand of a dext'rous Merry-Andrew, belonging to one of the booths at Bartholomew-fair. Neither was this falutation confined to his head; his shoulders, arms, thighs, ancles, and ribs, were vifited with amazing rapidity, while Tom Pipes founded the charge through his fift. Peregrine tired with this exercise, which had almost bereft his enemy of fensation, at last struck the decisive blow, in consequence of which, the squire's weapon flew out of his grafp, and he allowed our hero to be the better man. Satisfied with this acknowledgment, the victor, walked up stairs with fuch elevation of fpirits and infolence of mein, that nobody chose to intimate the resolution which had been taken in his absence: there having amused himself for fome time in beholding the country dance, he retreated to his lodging, where he indulged himself all night in the contemplation of his own fuccefs.

Next day in the forenoon he went to visit his partner, and the gentleman, at whose house she lived, having been informed of his family and condition, received him with great courtesy as the acquaintance of his cousin Gauntlet, and invited him to dinner that same day.

Emilia was remarkably well pleased when she understood the issue of his adventure, which began to make some noise in town, even though it deprived her of a wealthy admirer. The squire having consulted an attorney about the nature of the dispute, in hopes of being able to prosecute Peregrine for an assault, found little encouragement to go to law: he, therefore, resolved to pocket the insult and injury he had undergone, and to discontinue his addresses to her who was the cause of both.

Our lover being told by his mistress that she proposed to stay a fortnight longer at Windsor, he determined to enjoy her company all that time, and then to give her a convoy to the house of her mother whom he longed to fee. In confequence of this plan, he every day contrived some fresh party of pleasure for the ladies, to whom he had by this time free access; and entangled himself so much in the snares of love, that he seemed quite enchanted by Emilia's charms, which were now, indeed, almost irresistable. While he thus heedlefsly roved in the flowery paths of pleasure, his governor at Oxford, alarmed at the unufual duration of his absence, went to the young gentlemen who had accompanied him in his excursion, and very earnestly intreated them to tell him what they knew concerning his pupil; they accordingly gave him an account of the reincounter that happened between Peregrine and Miss Emilia Gauntlet in the caftle, and mentioned circumstances sufficient to convince him that his charge was very dangeroufly engaged.

Far from having an authority over Peregrine, Mr Jolter durst not even disoblige him; therefore, instead of writing to the commodore, he took horse immediately, and that same night reached Windsor, where he sound his stray sheep very much surprised at his unexpected arrival.

The governor desiring to have some serious conversation with him, they shut themselves up in an apartment, when Jolter, with great solemnity, communicated the cause of his journey, which was no other than his concern for his pupil's welfare; and very gravely undertook to prove by mathematical demonstration, that this intrigue, if farther pursued, would tend to the young gentleman's ruin and disgrace. This singular proposition raised the curiosity of Peregrine, who promised to yield all manner of attention, and desired him to begin without further preamble.

The governor, encouraged by this appearance of candour, expressed his satisfaction in sinding him so open to conviction, and told him that he would proceed upon geometrical principles. Then hemming thrice, observed that no mathematical inquiries could be carried on, except upon certain data, or concessions to truths that were self-evident; and, therefore, he must crave his assent to a few axioms, which he was sure Mr Pickle would see no reason to dispute. "In the first place then, (said he) you will grant, I hope, that youth and discretion are with respect to each other as two parallel lines, which though infinitely produced, remain still equi-distant, and will never coincide: then you must allow that passion acts upon the human mind, in a ratio compounded of the acuteness of sense, and constitutional heat: and thirdly, you will not deny that the angle of remorfe is equal to that of precipitation. These postulata being admitted, (added he, taking pen, ink and paper, and drawing a parallelogram) let youth be represented by the right line a, b, and discretion by another right line c, d, parallel to the former. Compleat the parallelogram a, b, e, d, and let the point of interfection b, represent perdition. Let passion, represented under the letter c, have a motion in the direction c, a. the same time, let another motion be communicated to it, in the direction c, d, it will proceed in the diagonal c, b, and describe it in the same time that would have described the side c, a, by the first motion, or the side c, d, by the second. To understand the demonstration of this corollary, we must premise this obvious principle, that when a body is acted upon by a motion of power parallel to a right line given in position, this power, or motion, has no effect to cause the body to approach towards that line, or recede from it, but to move in a line parallel to a right line only; as appears from the fecond law of motion: therefore c, a, being parallel to d, b, ---"

His pupil having listened to him thus far, could contain himself no longer, but interrupted the investigation with a loud laugh, and told him.

that his poflulata put him in mind of a certain learned and ingenious gentleman, who undertook to disprove the existence of natural evil, and ask no other datum on which to found his demonstration, but an acknowledgment that every thing that is, is right. "You may, therefore, (said he, in a peremptory tone) spare yourfelf the trouble of torturing your invention; for, after all, I am pretty certain that I shall want capacity to comprehend the discussion of your lemma, and confequently be obliged to refuse my assent to your deduction."

Mr Jolter was disconcerted at this declaration, and so much offended at Peregrine's disrespect, that he could not help expressing his displeasure, by telling him statly, that he was too violent and headstrong to be reclaimed by reason and gentle means; that he, (the tutor) must be obliged, in the discharge of his duty and conscience, to inform the commodore of his pupil's imprudence; that if the laws of this realm were effectual, they would take cognizance of the gipsey who had led him astray; and observed, by way of contrast, that if such a preposterous intrigue had happened in France, she would have been clapt up in a convent two years ago.

Our lover's eyes kindled with indignation, when he heard his mistress treated with such irreverence; he could scarce refrain from inslicting manual chastisement on the blasphemer, whom he reproached in his wrath as an arrogant pedant, without either delicacy or sense, and cautioned him against using any such impertinent freedoms with his affairs for the suture, on pain of incurring more severe effects of his resentment.

Mr Jolter, who entertained very high notions of that veneration to which he thought himself intitled by his character and qualifications, had not bore, without repining, his want of influence and authority over his pupil, against whom he cherished a particular grudge, ever since the adventure of the painted eye; and, therefore, on this occasion, his public forbearance had been overcome by the accumulated motives of his difgust. Indeed, he would have resigned his charge with disdain, had not he been encouraged to perfevere, by the hopes of a good living which Trunnion had in his gift, or known how to dispose of himself for the present to better advantage.

CHAP. XXV.

He receives a letter from his aunt, breaks with the commodore, and disobliges the lieutenant, who, nevertheless, undertakes his cause.

MEAN while he quitted the youth in high dudgeon, and that same evening dispatched a letter for Mrs Trunnion, which was dictated by the first transports of his passion, and of course replete with severe animadversions on the misconduct of his pupil.

In consequence of this complaint, it was not long before Peregrine received an epistle from his aunt, wherein she commemorated all the circumstances of the commodore's benevolence towards him, when he was helpless and forlorn, deserted and abandoned by his own parents, upbraided him for his misbehaviour, and neglect of his tutor's advice, and insisted upon his breaking off all intercourse with that girl who had seduced his youth, as he valued the continuance of her affection and her husband's regard.

As our lover's own ideas of generofity were extremely refined, he was shocked at the indelicate infinuations of Mrs Trunnion, and felt all the pangs of an ingenious mind that labours under obligations to a perfon whom it contemns. Far from obeying her injunction, or humbling himfelf by a fubmissive answer to her reprehension, his refentment buoyed him up above every felfish confideration; he refolved to attach himself to Emilia, if possible, more than ever; and although he was tempted to punish the officiousness of Jolter, by recriminating upon his life and conversation, he generously withstood the impulse of his passion, because he knew that his governor had no other dependance than the good opinion of the commodore. He could not, however, digest in Alence the severe expostulations of his aunt; to which he replied by the following letter, addressed to her husband.

"SIR,

PHOUGH my temper could never stoop to offer, nor, I believe, your disposition deign to receive that gross incense which the illiberal only expect, and none but the base minded condescend to pay; my sentiments have always done justice to your generosity, and my intention scrupuloufly adhered to the dictates of my duty. Confcious of this integrity of heart, I cannot but feverely feel your lady's unkind (I will not call it ungenerous) recapitulation of the favours I have received; and as I take it for granted, that you knew and approved of her letter, I must beg leave to affure you, that far from being fwayed by menaces and reproach, I am determined to embrace the most abject extremity of fortune, rather than fubmit to fuch dishonourable compulsion. When I am treated in a more delicate and respectful manner, I hope I shall behave as becomes,

SIR,

Your obliged, P. Pickle."

The commodore, who did not understand those nice distinctions of behaviour, and dreaded the consequence of Peregrine's amour, against which he was strangely prepossessed, seemed exasperated at the insolence and obstinacy of this adopted son;

which was transmitted by the hands of Hatchway, who had orders to bring the delinquent along with him to the garrison.

" Heark ye child,

JOU need not bring your fine speeches to L bear upon me. You only expend your ammunition to no purpose. Your aunt told you nothing but truth; for it is always fair and honest to be above board, d'ye see. I am informed as how you are in chace of a painted galley, which will decoy you upon the flats of destruction, unless you keep a better look out and a furer reckoning than you have hitherto done; and I have fent Jack Hatchway to fee how the land lies, and warn you of your danger: If so be as you will put about ship, and let him steer you into this harbour, you shall meet with a safe birth and friendly reception; but if you refuse to alter your course, you cannot expect any farther affistance from yours, as you behave,

HAWSER TRUNNION."

Peregrine was equally piqued and disconcerted at the receipt of this letter, which was quite disferent from what he had expected; and declared in a resolute tone to the lieutenant, who brought it, that he might return as soon as he pleased, for he was determined to consult his own inclination, and remain for some time longer where he wasHatchway endeavoured to perfuade him by all the arguments which his fagacity and friendship could fupply, to flew a little more deference for the old man, who was by this time rendered fretful and peevish by the gout, which now hindered him from enjoying himself as usual, and who might, in his passion, take some step very much to the detriment of the young gentleman, whom he had hitherto considered as his own son. Among other remonstrances, Jack observed that mayhap Peregrine had got under Emilia's hatches, and did not choose to set her adrift; and if that was the case, he himself would take charge of the vessel, and see her cargo safely delivered; for he had a respect for the young woman; and his needle pointed towards matrimony; and as, in all probability, the could not be much the worfe of the wear, he would make shift to soud through life with her under an easy fail.

Our lover was deaf to all his admonitions; and having thanked him for this last instance of his complaifance, repeated his resolution of adhering to his first purpose. Hatchway having profited so little by mild exhortations, assumed a more peremptory aspect, and plainly told him he neither could nor would go home without him; so he had best make immediate preparation for the voyage.

Peregrine made no other reply to this declaration than by a contemptuous smile, and rose from his seat in order to retire; upon which the lieutenant started up, and posting himself by the door, protested with some menacing gestures, that he would not fuffer him to run a-head neither. The other, incensed at his presumption in attempting to detain him by force, tripped up his wooden leg, and laid him on his back in a moment; then walked deliberately towards the park, in order to indulge his reflection, which at that time teemed with difagreeable thoughts. He had not proceeded two hundred steps, when he heard fomething blowing and stamping behind him; and looking back, perceived the lieutenant at his heels, with rage and indignation in his countenance. This exasperated seaman, impatient of the affront he had received, and forgetting all the circumstances of their former intimacy, advanced with great eagerness to his old friend, faying, "Look ye, brother, you're a faucy boy; and if you was at fea, I would have your backside brought to the Davit for your disobedience; but as we are on shore, you and I must crack a pistol at one another; here is a brace, you shall take which you please."

Peregrine, upon recollection, was forry for having been laid under the necessity of disobliging honest Jack, and very frankly asked his pardon for what he had done. But this condescension was misinterpreted by the other, who refused any other satisfaction but that which an officer ought to claim; and, with some irreverent expressions, asked if Perry was asraid of his bacon. The youth, inflamed at this unjust infinuation, darted a ferocious look at the challenger, told him he had paid but too much regard to his infirmities, and bid him walk forwards to the park, where he would soon convince him of his error, if he thought his concession proceeded from fear.

About this time, they were overtaken by Pipes, who having heard the lieutenant's fall, and feen him pocket his pistols, suspected that there was a quarrel in the case, and followed him with a view of protecting his mafter. Peregrine feeing him arrive, and guefung his intention, affumed an air of ferenity, and pretending that he had left his handkerchief at the inn, ordered his man to go thither and fetch it to him in the park, where he would find them at his return. This command was twice repeated before Tom would take any other notice of the message, except by shaking his head; but being urged with many threats and curses to obedience, he gave them to understand that he knew their drift too well to trust them by themselves. " As for you, lieutenant Hatchway (faid he) I have been your shipmate, and know you to be a failor, that's enough; and as for my master, I know him to be as good a man as ever stept betwixt stem and stern, whereby, if you have any thing to fay to him, I am your man, as the faying is. Here's my fapling, and I don't value your crackers of a rope's end." This oration, the longest that ever Pipes was known to make, he concluded VOL. I.

with a flourish of his cudgel, and enforc'd with fuch determined refufals to leave them, that they found it impossible to bring the cause to mortal arbitrement at that time, and strolled about the park in profound filence; during which, Hatchway's indignation fubfiding, he all of a fudden thrust out his hand as an advance to reconciliation, which being cordially shaken by Peregrine, a general pacification enfued; and was followed by a confultation about the means of extricating the youth from his present perplexity. Had his disposition been like that of most other young men, it would have been no difficult talk to overcome his difficulties; but fuch was the obstinacy of his pride, that he deemed himself bound in honour to resent the letters he had received; and instead of submitting to the pleasure of the commodore, expected an acknowledgement from him, without which he would liften to no terms of accommodation. "Had I been his own fon (faid he) I should have bore his reproof, and fued for forgiveness; but knowing myself to be on the footing of an orphan who depends intirely upon his benevolence, I am jealous of every thing that can be construed into disrespect, and insist upon being treated with the most punctual regard. I shall now make application to my father, who is obliged to provide for me by the ties of nature, as well as the laws of the land; and if he shall refuse to do me justice, I can never want employment while men are required for his majesty's service."

The lieutenant, alarmed at this intimation, begged he would take no new step until he should hear from him; and that very evening set out for the garrison, where he gave Trunnion an account of the miscarriage of his negociation, told him how highly Peregrine was offended at the letter, communicated the young gentleman's sentiment's and resolution; and finally assured him, that unless he should think proper to ask pardon for the offence he had committed, he would, in all appearance, never more behold the face of his godson.

The old commodore was utterly confounded at this piece of intelligence; he had expected all the humility of obedience and contrition from the young man; and instead of that, received nothing but the most indignant opposition, and even found himself in the circumstances of an offender, obliged to make atonement, or forfeit all correspondence with his favourite. These infolent conditions at first threw him into an agony of wrath, and he vented execrations with fuch rapidity, that he left himself no time to breathe, and had almost been suffocated with his cholar. He enveighed bitterly against the ingratitude of Peregrine, whom he mentioned with many opprobrious epithets, and fwore that he ought to be keel-hawled for his prefumption; but when he began to reflect more coolly upon the spirit of the young gentleman, which had already manifested itself on many occasions, and listened to the fuggestions of Hatchway, whom he had always confidered as an oracle in his way, his refentment abated, and he determined to take Persy into favour again; this placibility being not a little facilitated by Jack's narrative of our hero's intrepid behaviour at the affembly, as well as in the contest with him in the park. But still this plaguy amour occured like a bugbear to his imagination; for he held it as an infallible maxim, that woman was an eternal fource of mifery to man. Indeed this apothegm he feldom repeated fince his marriage, except in the company of a very few intimates, to whose secrecy and discretion he could trust. Finding Jack himself at a nonplus in the affair of Emilia, he confulted Mrs Trunnion, who was equally furprifed and offended, when she understood that her letter did not produce the defired effect; and after having imputed the youth's obstinacy to his uncle's unseasonable indulgence, had recourse to the advice of the parfon, who, still with an eye to his friend's advantage, counselled them to send the young gentleman on his travels, in the course of which he would, in all probability, forget the amusements of his greener years. The propofal was judicious, and immediately approved, when Trunnion going into his closet, after divers efforts, produced the following billet, with which Jack departed for Windfor that same afternoon.

" My good lad,

If I gave offence in my last letter, I'm forry for't, d'ye see; I thought it was the likeliest way to bring you up; but, in time to come, you shall have a larger swing of cable. When you can spare time, I shall be glad if you will make a short trip, and see your aunt, and him who is,

Your loving godfather and humble fervant,

HAWSER TRUNNION.

P. S. If you want money, you may draw upon me payable at fight."

CHAP. XXVI.

He becomes melancholy and despondent; is favoured with a condescending letter from his uncle, reconciles himself to his governor, and sets out with Emilia and her friend for Mrs Gauntlet's house.

PEregrine, fortified as he was with pride and indignation, did not fail to feel the fmarting fuggestions of his present situation: after having lived so long in an affluent and imperious manner, he could ill brook the thoughts of submitting to the mortifying exigencies of life. All the gaudy schemes of pomp and pleasure, which his luxuriant, imagination had formed, began to diffolve, a train of melancholy ideas took poffeffion of his thoughts, and the prospect of losing Emilia was not the least part of his affliction. Though he endeavoured to fuppress the chagrin that preved upon his heart, he could not conceal the disturbance of his mind from the penetration of that amiable young lady, who fympathized with him in her heart, though she could not give her tongue the liberty of asking the cause of his disorder; for, notwithstanding all the ardour of his addresses, he never could obtain from her the declaration of a mutual flame; because though he had hitherto treated her with theutmost reverence of respect, he had never once mentioned the final aim of his passion. However honourable she supposed it to be, she had discernment enough to forfee, that vanity or interest co-operating with the levity of youth, might one day deprive her of her lover, and the was too proud to give him any handle of exulting at her expence. Although he was received by her with the most distinguished civility, and even an intimacy of friendship, all his folicitations could never extort from her an acknowledgement of love; on the contrary, being of a gay disposition, she sometimes coquetted with other admirers, that his attention thus whetted might never abate, and that he might see she had other resources, in case he should flagg in his affection.

This being the prudential plan on which she acted, it cannot be supposed that she would condescend to inquire into the state of his thoughts, when she saw him thus affected: but she, nevertheless, imposed that task on her cousin and confidante, who, as they walked together in the park, observed that he seemed to be out of humour. When this is the case, such a question generally increases the disease; at least it had that effect upon Peregrine, who replied fomewhat peevishly, "I affure you, Madam, you never was more mistaken in your observations." "I think so too (faid Emilia) for I never faw Mr Pickle in higher fpirits." This ironical encomium compleated his confusion; he affected to smile, but it was a smile of anguish, and in his heart he cursed the vivacity of both. He could not for his foul recollect himself, so as to utter one connected sentence; and the fuspicion that they observed every circumstance of his behaviour, threw such a damp on his spirits, that he was quite overwhelmed with shame and resentment, when Sophy, casting her eyes towards the gate, faid, "Yonder is your fervant, Mr Pickle, with another man who feems to have a wooden leg." Peregrine started at this intelligence, and immediately underwent fundry changes of complexion, knowing that his fate, in a great measure, depended upon the information he would receive from his friend.

Hatchway advancing to the company, after a brace of sea-bows to the ladies, took the youth aside, and put the commodore's letter into his hand which threw him into such an agitation, that he could scarce pronounce, "Ladies, will you give me leave?" When, in consequence of their permission, he attempted to open the billet, he sumbled with such manifest disorder, that his mistress, who watched his motions, began to think there was something very interesting in the message; and so much was she affected with his concern, that she was fain to turn her head another way, and wipe the tears from her lovely eyes.

Mean while, Peregrine no sooner read the first sentence, than his countenance, which before was overcast with a deep gloom, began to be lighted up, and every feature unbending by degrees, he recovered his serenity. Having perused the letter, his eyes sparkling with joy and gratitude, he hugged the lieutenant in his arms, and presented him to the ladies as one of his best friends. Jack met with a most gracious reception, and shook Emilia by the hand, telling her, with the familiar appellation of old acquaintance, that he did not care how soon he was master of such another clean-going frigate as herself.

The whole company partook of this favourable change that evidently appeared in our lover's recollection, and enlivened his conversation with such an uncommon flow of sprightliness and good humour, as even made an impression on the iron countenance of Pipes himself, who actually smiled with satisfaction as he walked behind them.

The evening being pretty far advanced, they directed their course homeward; and while the valet attended Hatchway to the inn, Peregrine escorted the ladies to their lodgings, where he owned the justness of Sophy's remark, in saying he was out of humour, and told them he had been extremely chagrined at a difference which had happened between him and his uncle, to whom (by the letter which they had seen him receive) he now sound himself happily reconciled.

Having received their congratulations, and declined staying to sup with them, on account of the longing defire he had to converse with his friend Jack, he took his leave, and repaired to the inn, where Hatchway informed him of every thing that had happened in the garrison upon his representations. Far from being disgusted, he was perfectly well pleafed with the profpect of going abroad, which flattered his vanity and ambition, gratified his thirst after knowledge, and indulged that turn for observation, for which he had been remarkable from his most tender years. Neither did he believe a short absence would tend to the prejudice of his love, but, on the contrary, inhance the value of his heart, because he should return better accomplished, and confequently a more welcome offering to his miftrefs. Elevated with these sentiments, his heart dilated with joy, and the fluices of his natural benevolence being opened by this happy turn of his affairs, he sent his compliments to Mr Jolter, towhom he had not spoken during a whole week, and defired he would favour Mr Hatchway and him with his company at supper.

The governor was not weak enough to decline this invitation, in consequence of which he forthwith appeared, and was cordially welcomed by the relenting pupil, who expressed his sorrow for the misunderstanding which had prevailed between them, and assured him, that for the suture he would avoid giving him any just cause of complaint. Joster, who did not want affections, was melted by this acknowledgement, which he could not have expected, and earnestly protested, that his chief study had always been, and ever should be, to promote Mr Pickle's interest and happiness.

. The best part of the night being spent in the circulation of a chearful glass, the company broke up; and next morning Peregrine went out, with a view of making his mistress acquainted with his uncle's intention of fending him out of the kingdom for his improvement, and of faying every thing which he thought necessary for the interest of his love. He found her at breakfast with her cousin; and as he was very full of the subject of his visit, had scarce fixed himself in his feat, when he brought it upon the carpet, by asking with a smile, if the ladies had any commands for Paris? Emilia at this question began to stare, and her considente desired to know who was going thither? He no fooner gave them to understand, that he himself intended in a short time to visit that capital, than his mistress, with great precipitation, wished him a good journey, and affected to talk with indifference about the pleasures he would enjoy in France; but when he seriously assured Sophy, who asked if he was in earnest, that his uncle actually insisted upon his making a short tour, the tears gushed in poor Emilia's eyes, and she was at great pains to conceal her concern, by observing that the tea was so scalding hot, as to make her eyes water. This pretext was too thin to impose upon her lover, or even deceive the observation of her friend Sophy, who after breakfast, took an opportunity of quitting the room.

Thus left by themselves, Peregrine imparted to her what he had learnt of the commodore's intention, without however, mentioning a syllable of his being offended at their correspondence; and accompanied his information with such fervent vows of eternal constancy, and solemn promises of a speedy return, that Emilia's heart, which had been invaded by a suspicion, that this scheme of travelling was the effect of her lover's inconstancy, began to be more at ease; and she could not help signifying her approbation of his design.

This affair being amicably compromised, he asked how soon she proposed to set out for her mother's house; and understanding that her departure was fixed for next day but one, and that her cousin Sophy intended to accompany her in her father's chariot, he repeated his intention of attending her. In the mean time he dismissed his governor and the lieutenant to the garrison, with his compliments to his aunt and the commodore, and a faithful promise of his being with them in six days at farthest.

These previous measures being taken, he, attended by Pipes, set out with the ladies; and they had also a convoy for twelve miles from Sophy's father, who, at parting, recommended them piously to the care of Peregrine, with whom, by this time, he was perfectly well acquainted.

CHAP. XXVII.

They meet with a dreadful alarm on the road, arrive at their journey's end. Peregrine is introduced to Emilia's brother, these two young gentlemen misunderstand each other. Pickle departs for the garrison.

A S they travelled at an easy rate, they had performed something more than one half of their journey, when they were benighted near an inn, at which they resolved to lodge; the accommodation was very good; they supped together with great mirth and enjoyment; and it was not till after he had been warned by the yauns of the ladies, that he conducted them to their apartment; where wishing them good night, he retired to his own, and went to rest.

The house was crowded with country people who had been at a neighbouring fair, and now regaled themselves with ale and tobacco in the yard; so that their consideration, which at any time was but slender, being now overwhelmed by this debauch, they staggered into their respective kennels, and left a lighted candle sticking to one of the wooden pillars that supported the gallery. The slame in a little time laid hold on the wood, which was as dry as tinder, and the whole gallery was on fire, when Peregrine suddenly waked, and sound himself almost sufficiently focated. He sprung up in an instant, slipped on his breeches, and throwing open the door of his chamber, saw the whole entry in a blaze.

Heavens! what were the emotions of his foul, when he beheld the volumes of flame and fmoke rolling towards the room where his dear Emilia lay! Regardless of his own danger, he darted himself through the thickest of the gloom, when knocking hard, and calling at the same time to the ladies, with the most anxious intreaty to be admitted; the door was opened by Emilia in her shift, who asked with the utmost trepidation, what was the matter? he made no reply, but fnatching her up in his arms, like another Æneas, bore her through the flames to a place of fafety; where leaving her, before the could recollect herfelf, or pronounce one word, but " Alas! my cousin Sophy!" he flew back to the rescue of that young lady, and found her already delivered by Pipes, who having been alarmed by the smell of fire, had got up, rushed immediately to the chamber where he knew these companions lodged, and (Emilia being saved by her lover) brought off Miss Sophy with the loss of his own shockhead of hair, which was singed off in his retreat.

Vol. I. X

By this time the whole inn was alarmed; every lodger, as well as fervant, exerted himself, in order to stop the progress of this calamity; and there being a well replenished horsepond in the yard, in less than an hour the fire was totally extinguished, without having done any other damage than that of consuming about two yards of the wooden gallery.

All this time our young gentleman closely attended his fair charge, each of whom had fwooned with apprehension; but as their constitutions were good, and their spirits not easily dislipated, when upon reflection they found themselves and their company fafe, and that the flames were happily quenched, the tumult of their fear fubfided, they put on their cloaths, recovered their good humour, and began to rally each other on the trim on which they had been secured. Sophy observed, that now Mr Pickle had an indifputable claim to her cousin's affection; and, therefore, she ought to lay aside all affected referve for the future, and frankly avow the fentiments of her heart. Emilia retorted the arguments putting her in mind, that by the same claim Mr Pipes was entitled to the like return from her. . Her friend admitted the force of the conclusion, provided she could not find means of fatisfying her deliverer in another shape; and turning to the valet, who happened to be prefent, asked if his heart was not otherwise engaged? Tom, who did not conceive the meaning of the question, stood filent according to custom; and the interrogation being repeated, answered with a grin, " Heart-whole as a biscuit, I'll affure you Mistress." " What? (said Emilia) have you never been in love, Thomas?" " Yes, forfooth, (replied the valet without hefitation) fometimes of a morning." Peregrine could not help laughing, and his mistress looked a little disconcerted at this blunt repartee; while Sophy flipping a purse into his hand, told him there was fometing to purchase a periwig. Tom having consulted his master's eyes, refused the present, faying, "No, thank ye as much as if I did." And though she insisted upon his putting it in his pocket, as a small testimony of her gratitude, he could not be prevailed upon to avail himself. of her generofity; but following her to the other end of the room, thrust it into her sleeve without cremony, exclaiming, "I'll be damned to hell if I do." Peregrine having checked him for his boorish behaviour, sent him out of the room, and begged that Miss Sophy would not endeavour to debauch the morals of his fervant, who, rough and uncultivated as he was, had fenfe enough to perceive that he had no pretention to any fuch acknowledgement. But the argued with great vehemence, that the should never be able to make an acknowledgement adequate to the service he had done her, and that she should never be perfectly easy in her own mind, until she found some opportunity of manifesting the sense she had of the obligation: "I do not pretend (said she) to reward Mr Pipes; but I shall be absolutely unhappy, unless I am allowed to give him some token of my regard."

Peregrine, thus earnestly solicited, desired that since she was bent upon displaying her generosity, she would not bestow upon him any pecuniary gratisfication, but honour him with some trinket, as a mark of consideration; because he himself had such a particular value for the fellow, on account of his attachment and sidelity, that he should be sorry to see him treated on the sooting of a common mercenary domestick.

There was not one jewel in the possession of this grateful goung lady, that she would not have gladly given as a recompence, or badge of distinction to her refeuer; but his master pitched upon a seal-ring of no great value that hung at her watch; and Pipes being called in, had permission to accept that testimony of Miss Sophy's favour. Tom received it accordingly with sundry scrapes, and having kissed it with great devotion, put it on his little singer, and strutted off, extremely proud of his acquisition.

Emilia, with a most enchanting sweetness of aspect, told her lover, that he had instructed her how to behave towards him; and taking a diamond-ring from her finger, defired he would wear it for her fake. He received the pledge as became him, and presented another in exchange; which she at first refused, alledging that would destroy the intent of her acknowledgement; but Peregrine affured her, he had accepted her jewel, not as a proof of her gratitude, but as the mark of her love; and that if she refused a mutual token, he would look upon himfelf as the object of her disdain. Her eyes kindled, and her cheeks glowed with refentment at this impudent intimation, which she considered as an unseasonable insult; and the young gentleman perceiving her emotion, flood correctedfor his temerity, and asked pardon for the liberty of his remonstrance, which he hoped she would ascribe to the prevalence of that principle alone, which he had always taken pride in avowing.

Sophy seeing him disconcerted, interposed in his behalf, and chid her cousin for having practifed such unnecessary affectation; upon which Emilia, softened into compliance, held out her singer as a signal of her condescension. Peregrine put on the ring with great eagerness, mumbled her soft white hand in an extasy, which would not allow him to confine his embraces to that limb, but urged him to seize her by the waist, and snatch a delicious kiss from her lovepouting lips; nor would he leave her a butt to the ridicule of Sophy, on whose mouth he instantly committed a rape of the same nature; so that the two friends countenanced by each other, reprehended him with such gentleness of rebuke, that he was almost tempted to repeat the offence.

The morning being now lighted up, and the fervants of the inn on foot, he ordered some chocolate for breakfast; and at the desire of the ladies, sent Pipes to see the horses fed, and the chariot prepared, while he went to the bar, and discharged the bill.

These measures being taken, they set out about five o'clock, and having refreshed themselves and their cattle at another inn on the road, proceeded in the afternoon. Without meeting with any other accident, they fafely arrived at the place of their destination, where Mrs Gauntlet expressed her joy at seeing her old friend Mr. Pickle, whom, however, she kindly reproached for the long discontinuance of his regard. Without explaining the cause of that interruption, he protested that his love and esteem had never been discontinued, and that for the future he should omit no occasion of testifying how much he had her friendship at heart. She then made him acquainted with her fon, who at that time was in the house, being excused from his duty. by furlow.

This young man, whose name was Godfrey, was about the age of twenty, of a middling size, vigorous make, remarkably well shaped, and the scars of the small pox, of which he bore a good number, added a peculiar manliness to the air of his countenance. His capacity was good, and his disposition naturally frank and easy; but he had been a soldier from his infancy, and his education was altogether in the military style. He looked upon taste and letters as meer pedantry, beneath the consideration of a gentleman, and every civil station of life as mean, when compared with the profession of arms. He had made great progress in the gymnastic sciences of dancing, sencing and riding, played perfectly well on the German slute, and above all things valued himself upon a scrupulous observance of all the points of honour.

Had Peregrine and he considered themselves upon equal footing, in all probability they would have immediately entered into a league of intimacy and friendship; but this sufficient soldier looked upon his fifter's admirer as a young student raw from the university, and utterly ignorant of mankind; while squire Pickle beheld Godfrey in the light of a needy volunteer, greatly inferior to himself in fortune, as well as every other accomplishment. This mutual misunderstanding couldnot fail of producing animolities. The very next day after Peregrine's arrival, some sharp repartees passed between them in presence of the ladies, before whom each endeavoured to affert his own fuperiority. In these contests our hero neverfailed of obtaining the victory, because his genis us was more acute, and his talents better cultivated than those of his antagonist, who, therefore, took umbrage at his success, became jealous of his reputation, and began to treat him with marks of scorn and disrespect.

His fifter faw, and dreading the confequence of his ferocity, not only took him to talk in private for his impolite behaviour, but also entreated her lover to make allowances for the roughness of her brother's education. He kindly affured her, that whatever pains it might cost him to vanquish his own impetuous temper, he would for her fake endure all the mortifications to which her brother's arrogance might expose him; and after having flayed with her two days, and enjoyed feveral private interviews, during which he acted the part of a most passionate lover, he took his leave of Mrs Gauntlet over-night, and told the young ladies he would call early next morning to bid them farewel. He did not neglect this piece of duty, and found the two friends and breakfast already prepared in the parlour. All three being extremely affected with the thoughts of parting, a most pathetic silence for some time prevailed, till Peregrine put an end to it by lamenting his fate, in being obliged to exile himself so long from the dear object of his most interesting wish. He begged with the most earnest supplications, that she would now, in consideration of the cruel absence he must suffer, give him the consolation which she had hitherto refused, namely, that of knowing he poffeffed a place within her heart. The confidante feconded his request, representing that it was now no time to difguife her fentiments, when her lover was about to leave the kingdom, and might be in danger of contracting other connexions, unless he was confirmed in his constancy, by knowing how far he could depend upon her love; and, in short, she was plied with fuch irrefistible importunities, that she answered in the utmost confusion, "Though I have avoided literal acknowledgements, methink's the circumstances of my behaviour might have convinced Mr Pickle, that I do not regard him as a common acquaintance." " My charming Emilia! (cried the impatient lover, throwing himfelf at her feet) why will you deal out my happiness in fuch feanty portions? Why will you this mince the declaration which would overwhelm me with pleasure, and chear my lonely reflection, while I figh amid the folitude of separation? His fair mistress, melted by his image, replied, with the tears gushing from her eyes, "I'm afraid I shall feel that feparation more severely than you imagine." Transported at this flattering confession, he pressed her to his breast, and, while her head reclined upon his neck, mingled his tears with hers in great abundance, breathing the most tender vows of eternal fidelity. The gentle heart of Sophy could not bear this scene unmoved; she wept with fympathy, and encouraged the lovers to refign themselves to the will of fate, and support their spirits with the hope of meeting again on happier terms. Finally, after mutual promises, exhortations and endearments, Peregrine took his leave, his heart being so full, that he could scarce pronounce the word "Adieu!" and mounting his horse at the door, set out with Pipes for the garrison.

abla designar

CHAP. XXVIII.

Peregrine is overtaken by Mr Gauntlet, with whom he fights a duel, and contracts an intimate friendship. He arrives at the garrison, and finds his mother as implacable as ever. He is insulted by his brother Gam, whose preceptor he disciplines with a horse-whip.

IN order to expel the melancholy images that took possession of his fancy, at parting from his mistress, he called in the flattering ideas of those pleasures he expected to enjoy in France; and before he had rode ten miles, his imagination was effectually amused.

While he thus presecuted his travels by anticipation, and indulged himself in all the insolence of hope, at the turning of a lane he was all of a sudden overtaken by Emilia's brother on horse-back, who told him he was riding the same way, and should be glad of his company.

This young gentleman, whether prompted by personal pique, or actuated with zeal for the honour of his family, had followed our hero, with a view of obliging him to explain the nature of his attachment to his fifter. Peregrine returned his compliment with fuch disdainful civility, as gave him room to believe that he fuspected his errand; and, therefore, without further preamble, he declared his business in these words: " Mr Pickle, you have carried on a correspondence with my fifter for some time, and I should be glad to know the nature of it." To this queftion our lover replied, "Sir, I should be glad to know what title you have to demand that fatisfaction?" Sir (answered the other) I demand it in the capacity of a brother, jealous of his own honour, as well as of his fifter's reputation; and if your intentions are honourable, you will not refuse it?" "Sir, (faid Peregrine) I am not at prefent disposed to appeal to your opinion for the rectitude of my intentions; and I think you affume a little too much importance, in pretending to judge my conduct." " Sir, (replied the foldier) I pretend to judge the conduct of every man who interferes with my concerns, and even to chastise him, if I think he acts amis." " Chastife! (cried the youth with indignation in his looks) fure you dare not apply that term to me?" "You are mistaken (said Godfrey) I dare do any thing that becomes the character of a gentleman." " Gentleman, God wot! (replied the other, looking contemptuously at his equipage, which was none of the most superb) a very pretty gentleman, truly!" The foldier's wrath was inflamed by this ironical repetition, the contempt of which his conscious poverty made him feel; and he called his antagonist prefumptuous boy, infolent upstart, with other epithets, which Perry retorted with great bitterness. A formal challenge having passed between them, they alighted at the first inn, and walked into the next field, in order to decide their quarrel by the fword. Having pitched upon the spot, helped to pull off each other's boots, and laid afide their coats and waiftcoats, Mr Gauntlet told his opponent, that he himself was looked upon in the army as an expert fwordsman; and that if Mr Pickle had not made that science his particular study, they should be upon a more equal footing in using piftols. Peregrine was too much incenfed to thank him for his plain dealing, and too confident of his own skill to relish the other's proposal, which he accordingly rejected: then drawing his fword, he observed, that were he to treat Mr Gauntlet according to his deferts, he would order his man to punish his audacity with a horse-whip. Exasperated at this expression, which he considered as an indelible affront, he made no reply, but attacked his adversary with equal ferocity and address. The youth parried his first and second thrust, but received the third in the outside of his his fword arm. Though the wound was fuper-

ficial, he was transported with rage at fight of his own blood, and returned the affault with fuch fury and precipitation, that Gauntlet, loth to take advantage of his unguarded heat, stood upon the defensive. In the second longe, Peregrine's weapon entering a kind of net work in the shell of Godfrey's fword, the blade fnaped in two, and left him at the mercy of the foldier, who, far from making an infolent use of the victory he had gained, put up his Toledo with great deliberation, like a man who had been used to that kind of rencounters, observed that such a blade as Peregrine's was not to be trusted with a man's life: then advising the owner to treat a gentleman in diffress with more respect for the future, he flipped on his boots, and with fullen dignity of demeanour stalked back to the inn.

Though Pickle was extremely mortified at his miscarriage in this adventure, he was also struck with the behaviour of his antagonist, which assected him the more, as he understood that Godfrey's fierte had proceeded from the jealous sensibility of a gentleman declined into the vale of missortune. Gauntlet's valour and moderation induced him to put a savourable construction on all those circumstances of that young soldier's conduct, which before had given him disgust. Though in any other case he would have industriously avoided the least appearance of submission, he sollowed his conqueror to the inn, with a view of thanking him for his generous forbearance, and of foliciting his friendship and correspon-

Vol. I. Y

Godfrey had his foot in the stirrup to mount, when Peregrine coming up to him, desired he would defer his departure for a quarter of an hour, and favour him with a little private conversation. The soldier, who mistook the meaning of the request, immediately quitted his horse, and sollowed Pickle into a chamber, where he expected to find a brace of pistols loaded on the table; but he was very agreeably deceived, when our hero, in the most respectful terms, acknowledged his noble deportment in the field, owned that till then he had misunderstood his character, and begged he would honour him with his intimacy and correspondence.

Gauntlet, who had feen undoubted proofs of Peregrine's courage, which had confiderably raifed him in his esteem, and had sense enough to perceive that this concession was not owing to any fordid or finister motive, embraced his offer with demonstrations of infinite satisfaction. When he understood the terms on which Mr Pickle was with his fifter, he proffered his fervice in his. turn, either as agent, mediator, or confidant: may, to give his new friend a convincing proof of his fincerity, he disclosed to him a passion which he had for some time entertained for his cousin Miss Sophy, though he durst not reveal his sentiments to her father, lest he should be offended at his prefumption, and withdraw his protection from the family.

Peregrine's generous heart was wrung with anguish, when he understood that this young gentleman, who was the only son of a distinguished officer, had carried arms for the space of five years, without being able to obtain a subaltern's commission, though he had always behaved with remarkable regularity and spirit, and acquired the friendship and esteem of all the officers under whom he had served.

He would, at that time, with the utmost pleafure have shared his finances with him; but as he would not run the risk of offending the young foldier's delicacy of honour, by a premature exertion of his liberality, he resolved to infinuate himfelf into an intimacy with him, before he would venture to take fuch freedoms; and with that view pressed Mr Gauntlet to accompany him to the garrison, where he did not doubt of having influence enough to make him a welcome gueft. Godfrey thanked him very courteoufly for his invitation, which he faid he could not immediately accept, but promifed if he would favour him with a letter, and fix the time at which he proposed to fet out for France, he would endeavour to visit him at the commodore's habitation, and from thence give him a convoy to Dover. This new treaty being fettled, and a doffil of lint with a fnip of plaister applied to our adventurer's wound. he parted from the brother of his dear Emilia, to whom and his friend Sophy he fent his kindest wishes; and having lodged one night upon the road, arrived next day in the afternoon at the garrison, where he found all his friends in good health, and overjoyed at his return.

The commodore, who was by this time turned of feventy, and altogether crippled by the gout, feldom went abroad; and as his conversation was not very entertaining, had but little company within doors; so that his spirits must have quite stagnated, had not they been kept in motion by the conversation of Hatchway, and received at different times an wholesome fillip from the discipline of his spouse, who, by the force of pride, religion and Confac, had erected a most terrible tyranny in the house. There was such a quick circulation of domesticks in the family, that every suit of livery had been worn by figures of all dimensions; Trunnion himself had long before this time yielded to the torrent of her arbitrary sway; though not without divers obstinate efforts to maintain his liberty; and now, that he was disabled by his infirmities, when he used to hear his empress singing the loud Orthyan fong among the fervants below, he would often in whispers communicate to the lieutenant, hints of what he would do if so be as how he was not deprived of the use of his precious limbs. Hatchway was the only person whom the temper of Mrs Trunnion respected, either because she dreaded his ridicule, or looked upon his person with eyes of affection. being the situation of things in the garrison, it is not to be doubted that the old gentleman highly enjoyed the presence of Peregrine, who found means to ingratiate himself so effectually with his aunt, that while he remained at home, she seemed to have exchanged the disposition of a tygress, for that of a gentle kid: but he found his own mother as implacable, and his sather as much hen-pecked as ever.

Gamaliel, who now very feldom enjoyed the conversation of his old friend the commodore. had fome time ago entered into an amicable fociety, confifting of the barber, apothecary, attorney, and excifeman of the parish, among whom he used to spend the evening at Tunley's, and listen to their disputes upon philosophy and politicks, with great comfort and edification, while his fovereign lady domineered at home as usual, visited with great pomp in the neighbourhood, and employed her chief care in the education of her darling fon Gam, who was now in the fifteenth year of his age, and fo remarkable for his perverse disposition, that in spite of his mother's influence and authority, he was not only hated, but also dispised both at home and abroad. She had put him under the tuition of the curate, who lived in the family, and was obliged to attend him in all his exercifes and excursions. This governor was a low-bred fellow, who had neither experience nor ingenuity, but possessed a large fund of adulation and fervile complaifance, by which he had gained the good graces of Mrs Pickle, and prefided over all her deliberations in the same manner as his superior managed those of Mrs Trunnion.

He had one day rode out to take the air with his pupil, who, as I have already observed was odious to the poor people, for having killed their dogs and broken their inclosures, and on account of his hump, distinguished by the title of My Lord; when in a narrow lane they chanced to meet Peregrine on horfeback.

The young squire no sooner perceived his elder brother, for whom he had been instructed to entertain the most inveterate grudge, than he resolved to insult him en passant, and actually rode against him full gallop. Our hero guessing his aim, fixed himself in his stirrups, and by a dexterous management of the reins, avoided the shock in such a manner, as that their legs only should encounter, by which means my lord was tilted out of his faddle, and in a twinkling laid sprawling in the dirt. The governor, enraged at the difgrace of his charge, advanced with great infolence and fury, and struck at Peregrine with his whip. Nothing could be more agreeable to our young gentleman than this affault, which furnished him with an opportunity of chastifing an officious wretch, whose petulence and malice he had longed to punish. He, therefore, spurring up his horse towards his antagonist overthrew him in the middle of a hedge. Before he had time to recollect himself from the confusion of the fall, Pickle alighted in a trace, and exercised his horsewhip with such agility about the curate's face and ears, that he was fain to prostrate himself before his enraged conqueror, and implore his forbearance in the most abject terms. While Peregrine was thus employed, his brother Gam had made shift to rife, and attack him in the rear; for which reason, when the tutor was quelled, the victor faced about, snatched the weapon out of his hand, and having broken it to pieces, remounted his horse, and rode off, without deigning to honour him with any other notice.

The condition in which they returned produced infinite clamour against the conqueror, who was represented as a rushan who had lain in ambush to make away with his brother, in whose defence the curate was said to have received those cruel stripes, that hindered him from appearing for three whole weeks in the performance of his duty at church.

Complaints were made to the commodore, who having inquired into the circumstances of the affair, approved of what his nephew had done; adding with many oaths, that, provided Peregrine had been out of the scrape, he wished Crook-back had broke his neck in the fall.

CHAP. XXIX.

rais in fall of Manager far an information of their received a

He projects a plan of revenge, which is executed against the curate.

- section of some one than store one become

UR hero, exasperated at the villainy of the curate, in the treacherous mifrepresentation he had made of this rencounter, determined to practife upon him a method of revenge, which should be not only effectual, but also unattended with any bad confequence to himself. For this purpose he and Hatchway, to whom he imparted his plan, went to the ale-house one evening, and called for an empty room, knowing there was no other but that which they had chosen for the scene of action. This apartment was a fort of a parlour that fronted the kitchen, with a window towards the yard; where, after they had fat fome time, the lieutenant found means to amuse the landlord in discourse, while Peregrine stepping out into the yard, by the talent of mimickry, which he poffeffed in a furprifing degree, counterfeited a dialogue between the curate and Tunley's wife. This reaching the ears of the publican, for whose hearing it was calculated, inflamed his naturally jealous disposition to such a degree, that he could not conceal his emotion, but made an hundred efforts to quit the room; while the lieutenant, fmoaking his pipe with great gravity, as if he neither heard what passed, nor took notice of the landlord's diforder, detained him on the spot by a succession of questions which he could not resuse to answer; though he stood sweating with agony all the time, stretching his neck every instant towards the window through which the voices were conveyed, scratching his head, and exhibiting sundry other symptoms of impatience and agitation. At length, the supposed conversation came to such a pitch of amorous complainance, that the husband, quite frantic with his imaginary disgrace, rushed out at the door, crying, "Coming, Sir." But, as he was obliged to make a circuit round one half of the house, Peregrine had got in by the window, before Tunley arrived in the yard.

According to the feigned intelligence he had received, he ran directly to the barn, in expectation of making some very extraordinary discovery; and having employed some minutes in rummaging the straw to no purpose, returned in a state of distraction to the kitchen, just as his wise chanced to enter at the other door. The circumstance of her appearance confirmed him in the opinion that the deed was done. As the disease of being hen-peck'd was epidemic in the parish, he durst not express the least hint of his uneasiness to her, but resolved to take vengeance on the libidinous priest, who, he imagined, had corrupted the chastity of his spouse.

The two confederates, in order to be certified that their scheme had taken effect, as well as to blow up the flame which they had kindled, called for Tunley, in whose countenance they could eafily difcern his confusion. Peregrine desiring him to fit down and drink a glass with them, began to interrogate him about his family, and, among other things, asked him how long he had been married to that handsome wife? This question, which was put with an arch fignificance of look, alarmed the publican, who began to fear that Pickle had overheard his dishonour; and this suspicion was not at all removed, when the lieutenant, with a fly regard, pronounced, "Tunley, wan't you noofed by the curate? "Yes, I was," (replied the landlord with an eagerness and perplexity of tone, as if he thought the lieutenant knew, that thereby bung a tale;) and Hatchway supported this suspicion, by answering, " Nay, as for that matter, the curate may be a very fufficient man in his way." This transition from his wife to the curate, convinced him that his shame was known to his guests; and in the transport of his indignation, he pronounced with great emphasis, "A fufficient man! Odds heart! I believe they are all wolves in fheep's cloathing. I wish to God I could fee the day, master, when there shall not be a priest, an exciseman, or a custom-house officer in this kingdom. As for that fellow of a curate, if I do catch him-It don't fignify talking-But, by the Lord !- Gentlemen my fervice to you."

The affociates being fatisfied by these abrupt infinuations, that they had fo far fucceeded in their aim, waited with impatience two or three days in expectation of hearing that Tunley had fallen upon some method of being revenged for this imaginary wrong: but finding that either his invention was too shallow, or his inclination too languid to gratify their defire of his own accord, they determined to bring the affair to fuch a crisis, that he should not be able to withstand the opportunity of executing his vengeance. With this view, they one evening hired a boy to run to Mr Pickle's house, and tell the curate, that Mrs Tunley being taken fuddenly ill, her husband defired he would come immediately, and pray with her. Mean while, they had taken possession of a room in the house; and Hatchway engaging the landlord in conversation, Peregrine in his return from the yard, observed, as if by accident, that the parson was gone into the kitchen, in order, as he supposed, to catechise Tunley's wife.

The publican started at this intelligence, and under pretence of serving another company in the next room, went out to the barn, where arming himself with a slail, he repaired to a lane throw which the curate was under a necessity of passing in his way home. There he lay in ambush, with fell intent; and when the supposed author of his shame arrived, greeted him in the dark with such a salutation, as forced him to stagger backward three paces at least. If the second application had taken effect, in all probability that spot would have been the boundary of the parson's mortal peregrination, but luckily for him, his antagonist was not expert in the management of his weapon, which by a twift of the thong that connected the legs, instead of pitching upon the head of the aftonished curate, descended in an oblique direction on his own pate, with fuch a fwing, that the skull actually rung like an apothecary's mortar, and ten thousand lights seemed to dance before his eyes. The curate recollecting himself during the respite he obtained from this accident, and believing his aggressor to be some thief who lurked in that place for prey, refolved to make a running fight, until he should arrive within cry of his habitation. With this defign he raifed up his cudgel for the defence of his head, and betaking himself to his heels, began to roar for help with the lungs of a Stentor. Tunley throwing away the flail, which he durst no longer trust with the execution of his revenge, purfued the fugitive with all the speed he could exert; and the other, either unnerv'd by fear, or stumbling over a stone, was overtaken before he had run an hundred paces. He no sooner felt the wind of the publican's fift that whiftled round his ears, than he fell flat upon the earth at full length, and the cudgel flew from his unclasping hand; when Tunley springing like a tyger upon his back, rained fuch a shower of blows upon his carcase, that he imagined himself under the difcipline of ten pair of fifts at least; yet the imaginary cuckold, not satisfied with annoying the priest in this manner, laid hold on one of his ears with his teeth, and bit so unmercifully, that the curate was found almost intranced with pain by two labourers, at whose approach the assailant retreated unperceived.

The lieutenant had posted himself at the window, in order to see the landlord at his first return; and no sooner perceived him enter the yard, than he called him into the apartment, impatient to learn the effects of their stratagem. Tunley obeyed the summons, and appeared before his guests in all the violence of rage, disorder and satigue; his nostrils were dilated more than one half beyond their natural capacity, his eyes rolled, his teeth chattered, he snored in breathing as if he had been oppressed by the night-mare, and streams of sweat slowed down each side of his fore-head.

Peregrine affecting to start at the approach of such an uncouth figure, asked if he had been wrestling with a spirit; upon which he answered with great vehemence, "Spirit! No, no, master, I have had a roll and tumble with the sless. A dog! I'll teach him to come a caterwauling about my doors." Guessing from this reply, that his aim was accomplished, and curious to know the particulars of the rencounter, "Well then, (saith the youth) I hope you have prevailed against the sless, Tunley." "Yes, yes, (answered the publican) I have cooled his capissens, as the faying is: I have played such a tune about his ears, that I'll be bound he shan't long for music this month. A goatish ram-faced rascal! Why, he's a perfect parish bull, as I hope to live."

Vol. I. Z

Hatchway observing that he seemed to have made a stout battle, desired he would fit down and recover wind; and after he had swallowed a brace of bumpers, his vanity prompted him to expatiate upon his own exploit in such a manner, that the consederates, without seeming to know the curate was his antagonist, became acquainted with every circumstance of the ambuscade.

Tunley had scarce got the better of his agitation, when his wife entering the room, told them by way of news, that some waggish body had fent Mr Sackbut the curate to pray with her. This name inflamed the husband's cholar anew, and forgetting all his complaifance for his fpouse, he replied with a rancorous grin. " Add rabbit him! I doubt not but you found his admonitions deadly comfortable!" The landlady looking at her vaffal with a fovereign aspect, " What crotchets (faid she) have you got in your fool's head, I trow? I know no business you have to sit here like a gentleman with your arms akimbo, when there's another company in the house to be ferved." The submissive husband took the hint, and, without farther expostulation, fneaked out of the room.

Next day it was reported, that Mr Sackbut had been way-led, and almost murdered by robbers, and an advertisement was pasted upon the church-door, offering a reward to any person that should discover the assassin; but he reaped no satisfaction from this expedient, and was confined to his chamber a whole fortnight by the bruises he had received.

CHAP. XXX.

in the antimical was contraded effections.

Mr Sackbut and his pupil conspire against Peregrine, who, being apprised of their design by his sister, takes measures for counterworking their scheme, which is executed by mistake upon Mr Gauntlet. This young soldier meets with a cordial reception from the commodore who generously decoys him into his own interest.

THEN he considered the circumstances of the ambuscade, he could not persuade himself that he had been assaulted by a common thief, because it was not to be supposed that a robber would have amused himself in pumeling rather than in rissing his prey; he, therefore, ascribed his missortune to the secret enmity of some person who had a design upon his life; and upon mature deliberation, fixed his suspicion upon Peregrine, who was the only man on earth from whom he thought he deserved such treatment. He communicated his conjecture to his pupil, who readily adopted his opinion, and advifed him strenuously to revenge the wrong by a like contrivance, without feeking to make a narrower inquiry, lest his enemy should be thereby put upon his guard.

This proposal being relished, they in concert revolved the means of retorting the ambush with interest, and actually laid such a villainous plan for attacking our hero in the dark, that, had it been executed according to their intention, the young gentleman's scheme of travelling would have been effectually marred. But their machinations were overheard by Miss Pickle, who was now in the feventeenth year of her age, and, in fpite of the prejudice of education, entertained in fecret a most fisterly affection for her brother Perry, though she had never spoke to him, and was deterred by the precepts, vigilance and menaces of her mother, from attempting any means of meeting him in private. She was not, however, infensible to his praise, which was loudly founded forth in the neighbourhood, and never failed of going to church, and every other place, where the thought the might have an opportunity of feeing this amiable brother. With thefe fentiments it cannot be supposed that she would hear the conspiracy without emotion. She was shocked at the treacherous barbarity of Gam, and shuddered at the prospect of the danger to which Peregrine would be exposed from their malice. She durst not communicate this plot to her mother, because she was affraid that lady's unaccountable aversion for her first-born would hinder her from interposing in his behalf, and consequently render her a sort of accomplice in the guilt of his affassins. She, therefore, resolved to warn Peregrine of the conspiracy, an account of which she transmitted to him in an affectionate letter, by means of a young gentleman in that neighbourhood, who made his addresses to her at that time, and who, at her request, offered his service to our hero, in deseating the projects of his adversaries.

Peregrine was startled when he read the particulars of their scheme, which was no other thanan intention to fally upon him when he should be altogether unprovided against such an attack, cut off his ears, and otherwise mutilate him in such a manner, that he should have no cause to be vain of his person for the suture.

Incenfed as he was against the brutal disposition of his own father's son, he could not help being moved at the integrity and tenderness of his sister, of whose inclinations towards him he had been hitherto kept in ignorance. He thanked the gentleman for his honourable dealing, and expressed a desire of being better acquainted with his virtues; told him, that now he was cautioned, he hoped there would be no necessity for givinghim any further trouble, and wrote by him at letter of acknowledgement to his sister, for whom he expressed the utmost love and regard, beseech-ing her, to favour him with an interview before his departure, that he might indulge his fraternal fondness, and be blessed with the company and countenance of one at least belonging to his own family.

Having imparted this discovery to his friend Hatchway, they came to a resolution of countermining the plan of their enemies. As they did not choose to expose themselves to the infinuations of slander, which would have exerted itself at their expence, had they, even in defending themselves, employed any harsh means of retaliation, they invented a method of disappointing and disgracing their soes, and immediately set Pipes at work to forward the preparations.

Miss Pickle having described the spot which the assassing had pitched upon for the scene of their vengeance; our triumvirate intended to have placed a centinel among the corn, who should come and give them intelligence when the ambuscade was laid; and in consequence of that information, they would steal softly towards the place, attended by three or four of the domestics, and draw a large net over the conspirators, who being intangled in the toil, should be disarmed, settered, heartily scourged, and suspended between two trees in the snare as a spectacle to all passengers that should chance to travel that way.

The plan being thus digested, and the commodore made acquainted with the whole affair, the fpy was fent upon duty, and every body within doors prepared to go forth upon the first notice. One whole evening did they fpend in the most impatient expectation, but on the fecond the fcout crept into the garrison, and affured them that he had perceived three men skulking behind the hedge, on the road that led to the public house from which Peregrine and the lieutenant used every night to return about that hour. Upon this intelligence the confederates fet out immediately with all their implements. Approaching the scene with as little noise as possible, they heard the found of blows; and though the night was dark, perceived a fort of tumultuous conflict on the very fpot which the conspirators had posfeffed. Surprised at this occurrence, the meaning of which he could not comprehend, Peregrine ordered his myrmidons to halt and reconnoitre; and immediately his ears were faluted with an exclamation of "You shan't 'scape me, rascal." The voice being quite familiar to him, he allat once divined the cause of that confusion which they had observed; and running up to the affistance of the exclaimer, found a fellow on his knees begging his life of Mr Gauntlet, who flood over him with a naked hanger in his hand.

Pickle inftantly made himself known to his friend, who told him, that having left his horse at Tunley's, he was in his way to the garrison set upon by three rushans, one of whom being the very individual person now in his power, had come behind him, and struck with a bludgeon at his head, which however he missed, and the instrument descended on his left shoulder: that upon drawing his hanger, and laying about him in the dark, the other two sled, leaving their companion, whom he had disabled, in the lurch.

Peregrine congratulated him upon his safety, and having ordered Pipes to secure the prisoner, conducted Mr Gauntlet to the garrison, where he met with a very hearty reception from the commodore, to whom he was introduced as his nephew's intimate friend; not but that, in all likelihood, he would have abated somewhat of his hospitality, had he known that he was the brother of Perry's mistress; but her name the old gentleman had never thought of asking, when he inquired into the particulars of his godson's amour.

The captive being examined, in presence of Trunnion and all his adherents, touching the ambuscade, owned, that being in the service of Gam Pickle, he had been prevailed upon by the solicitations of his master and the curate, to accompany them in their expedition, and undertake the part which he had acted against the stranger, whom he and his employers mistook for Peregrine. In consideration of this frank acknowledgement, and a severe wound he had received in his right arm, they resolved to insict no other punishment on this malesactor, than to detain him all night in the garrison, and next morning carry him before a justice of the peace, to whom he repeated all that he had said over-night, and with his own hand subscribed his confession, copies of which were handed about the neighbourhood, to the unspeakable confusion and disgrace of the curate and his promiting pupil.

Mean while Trunnion treated the young foldier with uncommon marks of respect, being prepossessed in his favour by this adventure, which he had so gallantly atchieved, as well as by the encomiums that Peregrine bestowed upon his valour and generosity. He liked his countenance, which was bold and hardy, admired his Herculean limbs, and delighted in asking questions concerning the service he had seen.

The day after his arrival, while the conversation turned on this last subject, the commodore, taking the pipe out of his mouth, I'll tell you what, brother (faid he) five and forty years ago, when I was third lieutenant of the Warwick man of war, there was a very flout young fellow on board, a fubaltern officer of marines; his name was not unlike your own, d'ye fee, being Guntlet, with a G. I remember he and I could not abide one another at first, because, dy'e see, I was a sailor and he a land-man, till we fell in with a Frenchman, whom we engaged for eight glaffes, and at length boarded and took. I was the first man that stood on the enemy's deck, and should have come scurvily off, dy'e see, if Guntlet, had not jumped to my assistance; but we soon cleared ship, and drove them to close quarters, so that they were obliged to strike; and from that day

Guntlet and I were fworn brothers as long as he remained on board. He was exchanged into a marching regiment, and what became of him afterwards, Lord in heaven knows; but this I'll fay of him, whether he be dead or alive, he feared no man that ever wore a head, and was, moreover,

a very hearty messmate."

The stranger's breast glowed at this eulogium, which was no sooner pronounced than he eagerly asked, if the French ship was not the Diligence? The commodore replied with a stare, "The very same, my lad." "Then (said Gauntlet) the person of whom you are pleased to make such honourable mention was my own father." "The devil he was! (cried Trunnion shaking him by the hand) I am rejoiced to see a son of Ned Guntlet in my house."

This discovery introduced a thousand questions, in the course of which the old gentleman learnt the situation of his friend's family, and discharged innumerable execrations upon the ingratitude and injustice of the ministry, which had failed to provide for the son of such a brave soldier. Nor was his friendship confined to such inessectual expressions; he that same evening signified to Peregrine a desire of doing something for his friend. This inclination was so much praised, encouraged and promoted by his godson, and even supported by his counsellor Hatchway, that our hero was empowered to present him with a sum of money sufficient to purchase a commission.

Though nothing could be more agreeable to Pickle than this permission, he was affraid that Godfrey's fcrupulous disposition would hinder him from subjecting himself to any such obligation; and, therefore, proposed that he should be decoyed into his own interest by a feigned story, in consequence of which he would be prevailed upon to accept of the money, as a debt which the commodore had contracted of his father at fea. Trunnion made wry faces at this expedient, the necessity of which he could not conceive, without calling in question the common sense of Gauntlet, as he took it for granted, that fuch offers as those were not to be rejected, on any consideration whatever. Besides, he could not digest an artifice, by which he himfelf must own that he had lived fo many years, without manifesting the least intention of doing justice to his creditor. All these objections, however, were removed by the zeal and thetoric of Peregrine, who reprefented that it would be impossible to befriend him on any other terms; that his filence hitherto would be imputed to his want of information touching the circumstances and condition of his friend; and that his remembering and infifting upon discharging the obligation, after such an interval of time, when the whole affair was in oblivion, would be the greatest compliment he could pay to his own honour and integrity.

Thus perfuaded, he took an opportunity of Gauntlet's being alone with him to broach the affair, telling the young man, that his father had advanced a sum of money for him, when they sailed together, on account of the mess, as well as to stop the mouth of a clamorous creditor at Portsmouth; and that the said sum, with interest, amounted to about four hundred pounds, which he would now, with great thankfulness, repay.

Godfrey was amazed at this declaration, and after a confiderable pause replied, that he had never heard his parents mention any such debt; that no memorandum or voucher of it was found among his father's papers; and that, in all probability, it must have been discharged long ago, although the commodore, in such a long course of time and hurry of occupation, might have forgot the repayment; he therefore desired to be excused from accepting what in his own conscience he believed was not his due; and complimented the old gentleman upon his being so scrupulously just and honourable.

The foldier's refusal, which was matter of astonishment to Trunnion, increased his inclination to assist him: and, on pretence of acquitting his own character, he urged his beneficence with such obstinacy, that Gauntlet, affraid of disobliging him, was in a manner compelled to receive a draught for the money, for which he subscribed an ample discharge, and immediately transmitted the order to his mother, whom at the same time he informed of the circumstances by which they had so unexpectedly gained this acception of fortune.

Such a piece of news could not fail of being agreeable to Mrs Gauntlet, who by the first post wrote a polite letter of acknowledgement to the commodore, another to her own son, importing, that she had already sent the draught to a friend in London, with directions to deposite it in the hands of a certain banker, for the purchase of the first ensigncy to be sold; and she took the liberty of sending a third to Peregrine, couched in very affectionate terms, with a kind postscript, signed by Miss Sophy and his charming Emilia.

This affair being transacted to the satisfaction of all concerned, preparations were set on soot for the departure of our hero, on whom his uncle settled an annuity of eight hundred pounds, being little less than one half of his whole income. By this time indeed the old gentleman could easily afford to alienate such a part of his fortune, because he entertained little or no company, kept sew servants, was remarkably plain and frugal in his house-keeping; Mrs Trunnion being now some years on the wrong side of sifty, her infirmities began to increase; and though her pride had suffered no diminution, her vanity was altogether subdued by her avarice.

A Swiss valet de chambre, who had already made the tour of Europe, was hired for the care of Peregrine's own person; Pipes being ignorant of the French language, as well as otherwise unfit for the office of a fashionable attendant, it was resolved that he should remain in garrison; and his place was immediately supplied by a Parisian lacquey engaged at London for that purpose. Pipes did not seem to relish this disposition of things; and though he made no verbal objections to it, looked remarkably sour at his successor upon his sirst arrival; but this sullen sit seemed gradually to wear off; and long before his master's departure, he had recovered his natural tranquillity and unconcern.

Vol. I. A a

CHAP. XXXI.

The two young gentlemen display their talents for gallantry, in the course of which they are involved in a ludicrous circumstance of distress, and afterwards take vengeance on the author of their mishap.

MEAN while our hero and his new friend, together with honest Jack Hatchway, made daily excursions into the country, visited the gentlemen in the neighbourhood, and frequently accompanied them to the chase; all three being exceedingly carressed on account of their talents, which could accommodate themselves with great facility to the tempers and turns of their entertainers. The lieutenant was a droll in his way, Peregrine possessed a great fund of spright-liness and good humour, and Godfrey, among his other qualifications already recited, sung a most excellent song; so that the company of this triumvirate was courted in all parties, whether male or semale; and if the hearts of our young gentlemen had not been pre-engaged, they would have met with opportunities in abundance of displaying their address in the art of love; not but that they gave louse to their gallantry without much interesting their affections, and amused themselves with little intrigues, which, in the opinion of a man of pleasure, do not affect his sidelity to the acknowledged sovereign of his soul.

In the midst of these amusements, our hero received an intimation from his sister, that she should be overjoyed to meet him next day, at sive o'clock in the afternoon, at the house of her nurse, who lived in a cottage hard by her father's habitation, she being debarred from all opportunity of seeing him in any other place by the severity of her mother, who suspected her inclination.

He accordingly obeyed the summons, and went at the time appointed to the place of rendezvous, where he met this affectionate young lady, who, when he entered the room, ran towards him with all the eagerness of transport; slung her arms about his neck, and shed a flood of tears in his bosom before she could utter one word, except a repetition of My dear, dear brother! He embraced her with all the piety of fraternal tenderness, wept over her in his turn, assured her that this was one of the happiest moments of his life, and kindly thanked her for having resisted the example, and disobeyed the injunctions of his mother's unnatural aversion.

He was ravished to find by her conversation, that she possessed a great share of sensibility and prudent reslection; for she lamented the infatuation of her parents with the most filial regret, and expressed such abhorrence and concern at the villainous disposition of her younger brother, as a humane sister may be supposed to have entertained. He made her acquainted with all the circumstances of his own fortune, and as he supposed, she spent her time very disagreeably at home, among characters which must be shockingly interesting, professed a desire of removing her into some other sphere, where she could live with more tranquillity and satisfaction.

She objected to this proposal as an expedient that would infallibly subject her to the implacable resentment of her mother, whose favour and affection she at present enjoyed but in a very inconsiderable degree; and they had canvassed divers schemes of corresponding for the suture, when the voice of Mrs Pickle was heard at the door.

Miss Julia (that was the young lady's name) finding herself betrayed, was seized with a violent agitation of fear, and Peregrine scarce had time to encourage her with a promise of protection, before the door of the apartment being flung open, this irreconcileable parent rushed in, and with a furious aspect slew directly at her trembling daughter, when the son interposing, received the first discharge of her fury.

Her eyes gleamed with all the rage of indignation, which choaked up her utterance, and feemed to convulse her whole frame; she twifted her left hand in his hair, and with the other buffeted him about the face, till the blood gushed from his nostrils and mouth; while he defended his fifter from the cruelty of Gam, who affaulted her from another quarter, feeing his brother en-This attack lasted several minutes with great violence, till at length Peregrine finding himself in danger of being overpowered, if he should remain any longer on the defensive, laid his brother on his back; then he difentangled his mother's hand from his own hair, and having pushed her gently out of the room, bolted the door on the infide; finally, turning to Gam, he threw him out at the window among a parcel of hogs that fed under it. By this time Julia was almost quite distracted with terror; fhe knew she had offended beyond all hope of forgiveness, and from that moment considered herself as an exile from her father's house; in vain did her brother strive to console her with fresh protestations of love and protection, she counted herself extremely miserable in being os bliged to endure the eternal refentment of a parent with whom she had hitherto lived, and dreaded the censure of the world, which from her mother's misrepresentation, she was sensible would condemn her unheard. That she might not however neglect any means in her power of averting this storm, she resolved to appeale, if possible, her mother's wrath with humiliation, and even appeal to the influence of her father, weak as it was, before the would dispair of being But the good lady spared her this forgiven. unnecessary application, by telling her through the key-hole, that she must never expect to come within her father's door again; for from that hour, she renounced her as unworthy of her affection and regard. Julia weeping bitterly, endeavoured to foften the rigour of this fentence, by the most submissive and reasonable remonftrances; but as in her vindication she of necessity espoused her elder brother's cause, her endeavours, instead of foothing, ferved only to exasperate her mother to an higher pitch of indignation, which discharged itself in invectives against Peregrine, whom the reviled with the epithets of a worthless abandoned reprobate.

The youth hearing these unjust aspersions, trembled with resentment through every limb, assuring the upbraider, that he considered her as an object of compassion; "for without all doubt, saidhe, your diabolical rancour must be severely punished by the thorns of your own conscience, which this very instant taxes you with the malice and falsehood of your reproaches. As for my fister, I bless God that you have not been able to infect her with your unnatural prejudice, which because she is too just, too virtuous, too humane toimbibe, you reject her as an alien to your blood, and turn her out unprovided into a barbarous world. But even there your vitious purpose shall be defeated; that same providence that screened me from the cruelty of your hate, shall extend its protection to her, until I shall find it convenient to affert by law that right of maintenance which nature, it feems, hath bestowed upon us in vain. In the mean time, you will enjoy the fatisfaction of paying an undivided attention to that darling fon, whose amiable qualities have so long engaged and engroffed your love and efteem."

This freedom of expostulation exalted his mother's ire to mere frenzy; she cursed him with the bitterest imprecations, and raved like a Bedlamite at the door, which she attempted to burst open. Her efforts were seconded by her favourite son, who denounced vengeance against Peregrine, made surious assaults against the lock, which resisted all their applications, until our hero espying his friends Gauntlet and Pipes stepping over a stile that stood about a surlong from the window, called them to his assistance; giving them to understand how he was besieged, he desired they would keep off his mother, that he might the more easily secure his sister Julia's retreat. The young soldier entered accordingly, and posting himself.

between Mrs Pickle and the door, gave the signal to his friend, who lifting up his sister in his arms, carried her safe without the clutches of this she-dragon, while Pipes with his cudgel kept young master at bay.

The mother being thus deprived of her prey, fprung upon Gauntlet like a lioness robbed of her whelps; and he must have suffered sorely in the slesh, had he not prevented her mischievous intent by seizing both her wrists, and so keeping her at due distance. In attempting to disengage herself from his grasp, she struggled with such exertion, and suffered such agony of passion at the same time, that she actually fell into a severe sit, during which she was put to bed, and the confederates retired, without further molestation.

In the mean time, Peregrine was not a little perplexed about the disposal of his sister whom he had rescued. He could not endure the thoughts of saddling the commodore with a new expence; and he was affraid of undertaking the charge of Julia, without his benefactor's advice and direction; for the present, however, he carried her to the house of a gentleman in the neighbourhood, whose lady was her godmother, where she was received with great tenderness and condolence; and he purposed to inquire for some creditable house, where she might be genteely boarded in his absence, resolving to maintain her from the savings of his own allowance, which he thought might very well bear such deduction. But this intention was frustrated by the publication of the whole affair, which was divulged next day, and soon reached the ears of Trunnion, who chid his godson for having concealed the adventure; and, with the approbation of his wife, ordered him to bring Julia forthwith to the garrison. The young gentleman, with tears of gratitude in his eyes, explained his design of maintaining her at his own expence, and earnestly begged that he might not be deprived of that satisfaction. But his uncle was deaf to all his entreaties, and insisted upon her living in the garrison, though for no other reason than that of being company to her aunt, who, he observed, was lost for want of conversation.

Julia was accordingly brought home, and fettled under the tuition of Mrs Trunnion, who, whatever face she might put on the matter, could have dispensed with the society of her niece: though she was not without hope of gratifying her pique to Mrs Pickle by the intelligence she would receive from the daughter of that lady's economy and domestic behaviour. The mother herself seemed confcious of this advantage which her fifter-in-law had now gained over her, being as much chagrined at the news of Julia's reception in the garrison, as if she had heard of her own husband's death. She even tortured her invention to propagate calumnies against the reputation of her own daughter, whom she slandered in all companies; she exclaimed against the commodore as an old rushan who spirited up a rebellion among her children, and imputed the hospitality of his wife, in countenancing them, to nothing else but her inveterate enmity to their mother, whom they had disobliged. She now insisted in the most peremptory terms, upon her husband's renouncing all commerce with the old lad of the castle and his adherents; and Mr Gamaliel having by this time contracted other friendships, readily submitted to her will, nay, even refused to communicate with the commodore one night, when they happened to meet by accident at the public-house.

CHAP. XXXII.

The commodore fends a challenge to Gamaliel, and is imposed upon by a waggish invention of the lieutenant, Peregrine and Gauntlet.

THIS affront Trunnion could by no means digest: he advised with the lieutenant upon the subject, and the result of their consultation was a defiance which the old commander sent to Pickle, demanding that he would meet him at such a place on horseback with a brace of pistols, and give satisfaction for the slight he had put upon him.

Nothing could have afforded more pleasure to Jack, than the acceptance of this challenge, which he delivered verbally to Mr Gamaliel, who was called out from the club at Tunley's for that purpose. The nature of this message had an instantaneous essect upon the constitution of the pacifick Pickle, whose bowels yearned with apprehension, and underwent such violent agitation on the spot, that one would have thought the operation proceeded from some severe joke of the apothecary which he had swallowed in his beer.

The messenger despairing of a satisfactory anfwer, left him in this woeful condition; and being loth to lofe any opportunity of raising the laugh against the commodore, went immediately and communicated the whole affair to the young gentlemen, entreating them, for the love of God, to concert fome means of bringing old Hannibal into the field. The two friends relished the proposal, and after some deliberation, it was refolved that Hatchway should tell Trunnion his invitation was accepted by Gamaliel, who would meet him at the place appointed. with his fecond, to-morrow in the twilight, because if either should fall, the other would have the better chance for escaping in the dark; that Godfrey should personate old Pickle's friend. and Peregrine represent his own father, while the lieutenant should take care in loading the pistols to keep out the shot, so as that no damage might be done in the rencounter.

These circumstances being adjusted, the lieutenant returned to his principal with a most thundering reply from his antagonist, whose couragious behaviour, though it could not intimidate, did not fail to aftonish the commodore, who afcribed it to the spirit of his wife which had inspired him. Trunnion that instant defired his counsellor to prepare his cartridge-box, and order the quietest horse in the stable to be kept ready faddled for the occasion; his eye feemed to lighten with alacrity and pleafure at the prospect of fmelling gun-powder once more before his death; and when Jack advised him to make his will, in case of accident, he rejected his counsel with difdain, faying, " What! dost think that Hawser Trunnion, who has stood the fire of fo many floating batteries, runs any risk from the loufy pops of a landman? Thou shalt fee, thou shalt fee how I'll make him lower his Next day Peregrine and the foldier topfails. provided themselves with horses at the public house, from whence, at the destined hour, they rode to the field of battle, each of them being muffled in a great coat, which, with the dimness of the light, effectually shielded them from the knowledge of the one-eyed commander, who having taken horse, on pretence of enjoying the fresh air, soon appeared with Hatchway in his rear. When they came within fight of each other, the feconds advanced, in order to divide the ground, and regulate the measures of the combat; when it was determined by mutual confent, that two pistols should be discharged on each fide, and that if neither should prove decifive, recourse must be had to the broad-swords. in order to afcertain the victory. These articles being fettled, the opponents rode forward to their respective stations, when Peregrine cocking his pistol, and prefenting, counterfeited his father's voice, bidding Trunnion take care of his remaining eye. The commodore took his advice, being unwilling to hazard his day-light, and very deliberately opposed the patched fide of his face to the muzzel of his antagonist's piece, defiring him to do his duty without further jaw. The young man accordingly fired, and the diftance being small, the wad of his pistol took place with a fmart stroke on the forehead of Trunnion, who mistaking it for a ball, which he thought was lodged in his brain, fpurred up his steed in a state of desperation towards his antagonist, and holding his piece within two yards of his body, let it off, without any regard to the laws of battle. Surprised and enraged to see it had made no impression, he hallooed in a terrible tone, "O! damn ye, you have got your netting stuffed, I see;" and advancing, discharged his fecond piftol fo near his godfon's head, that had he not been defended by his great coat, the powder must have scorched his face. Having thus thrown away his fire, he remained at the mercy of Peregrine, who clapping the piece he Vol. I.

had in referve to his head, commanded him to beg his life, and ask pardon for his presumption. The commodore made no reply to this imperious injunction, but dropping his pistol, and unfleathing his broad-fword in an instant, attacked our hero with fuch incredible agility, that if he had not made shift to ward off the stroke with his piece, the adventure, in all likelihood, would have turned out a very tragical joke. Peregrine finding it would be in vain for him to think of drawing his weapon, or of standing on the defensive against this furious aggressor, very fairly clapt spurs to his nag, and sought his safety in flight. Trunnion purfued him with infinite eagerness, and his stead being the better of the two, would have overtaken the fugitive to his peril, had he not been unfortunately encountered by the boughs of a tree, that happened to stand on his blind fide, and incommoded him fo much, that he was fain to quit his fword, and lay hold on the mane, in order to maintain his feat. perceiving his difaster, wheeled about, and now finding leifure to produce his weapon, returned upon his disarmed foe, brandishing his Ferrara, threatening to make him shorter by the head, if he would not immediately crave quarter and There was nothing farther from the intention of the old gentleman than fuch fubmiffion, which he flatly refused to pay, alledging that he had already compelled his enemy to clap on all his fails, and that his own present misfortune was owing to accident, all one, as if a ship should be attacked after she had been obliged to heave her guns overboard in a storm.

Before Peregrine had time to answer this remonstrance, the lieutenant interposed, and taking cognizance of the case, established a truce until he and the other second should discuss and decide upon the merits of the cause. They accordingly retired to a small distance; and after having conferred a few minutes, Hatchway returned, and pronounced the commodore vanquished by the chance of war.

Never was rage more transported than that which took possession of old Hannibal, when he heard the sentence; it was some time before he could utter aught, except the reproachful expression, You lie! which he repeated more than twenty times, in a fort of delirious insensibility. When he recovered the further use of speech, he abused the arbitrators with such bitter invectives, renouncing their sentence, and appealing to another trial, that the consederates began to repent, of having carried the joke so far; and Peregrine, in order to appeale his choler, owned himself overcome.

This acknowledgement calmed the tumult of his wrath, though he could not for some days forgive the lieutenant; and the two young gentlemen rode back to Tunley's, while Hatchway, taking the commodore's horse by the bridle, reconducted him to his mansion, growling all the way to Jack for his unjust and unfriendly decree; though he could not help observing, as how he had made his words good in making his adverfary strike his top-fails: " And yet (faid he) before God! I think the fellow's head is made of a wool-pack; for my shot rebounded from his face like a wad of fpun-yarn from the walls of a ship. But, if so be that son of a bitch of a tree hadn't come athwart my weather-bow, d'ye fee, I'll be damned if I hadn't fnapt his main yard in the flings, and mayhap let out his bulge-water into the bargain." He feemed particularly vain of this exploit, which dwelt upon his imagination, and was cherished as the child of his old age; for though he could not with decency rehearse it to the young men and his wife at supper, he gave shrewd hints of his own manhood, even at these years, and attested Hatchway as a voucher for his mettle; while the triumvirate, diverted by his vanity, enjoyed in fecret the fubject of their imposition.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Peregrine takes leave of his aunt and sister, sets out from the garrison, parts with his uncle and Hatchway on the road; and with his governor arrives in safety at Dover.

THIS, however, was the last effort of invention which they practised upon him; and every thing being now prepared for the departure of his godson, that hopeful youth in two days took leave of all his friends in the neighbourhood. He was closeted two whole hours with his aunt, who enriched him with many pious advices, recapitulated all the benefits which, through her means had been conferred upon him fince his infancy, cautioned him against the temptations of lewd women, who bring many a man to a morfel of bread, laid strict injunctions upon him to live in the fear of the Lord and the true Protestant faith, to eschew quarrels and contention, to treat Mr Jolter with reverence and regard, and above all things to abstain from the beaftly fin of drunkenness, which exposed a man to the fcorn and contempt of his fellow-creatures, and by divesting him of reason and resection, renders him fit for all manner of vice and de-She recommended to him œcobauchery. nomy and the care of his health, bade him remember the honour of his family, and in all the circumstances of his behaviour, affured him, that he might always depend upon the friendship and generofity of the commodore. Finally, prefenting him with her own picture fet in gold, and a hundred guineas from her privy purfe, the embraced him affectionately, and wished him all manner of happiness and prosperity.

Being thus kindly dismissed by Mrs Trunnion, he locked himself up with his sister Julia, whom he admonished to cultivate her aunt with the most complaisant and respectful attention, without stooping to any circumstance of submission that she should judge unworthy of her practice; he protested that his chief study should be to make her amends for the privilege she had forfeited by her affection for him; entreated her to enter into no engagement without his knowledge and approbation; put into her hand the purse which he had received from his aunt, to defray her pocket-expences in his absence, and parted from her, not without tears, after she had for some minutes hung about his neck, kissing him and weeping in the most pathetic silence.

Having performed these duties of affection and confanguinity over-night, he went to bed, and was, by his own direction, called at four o'clock in the morning, when he found the post-chaife, coach and riding-horses ready at the gate, his friends Gauntlet and Hatchway on foot, the commodore himself almost dressed, and every fervant in the garrison affembled in the yard, to wish him a good journey. Our hero shook each of these humble friends by the hand, tipping them at the same time with marks of his bounty; and was very much furprifed when he could not perceive his old attendant Pipes among the number. When he expressed his wonder at this difrespectful omission of Tom, some of those prefent ran to his chamber, in order to give him a call, but his hammock and room were both deferted, and they foon return'd with an account of his having eloped. Peregrine was disturbed at this information, believing that the fellow had taken some desperate course in consequence of his being dismissed from his service, and began to wish that he had indulged his inclination by retaining him still about his person. However, as there was now no other remedy, he recommended him strenuously to the particular fayour and distinction of his uncle and Hatchway, in case he should appear again; and as he went out of the gate, was faluted with three chears by all the domestics in the family. The commodore, Gauntlet, lieutenant, Peregrine and Jolter went into the coach together, that they might enjoy each other's conversation as much as poffible, refolving to breakfast at an inn upon the road, where Trunnion and Hatchway intended to bid our adventurer farewel; the valet de chambre got into the post-chaife, the French lacquey rode one horse and led another, one of the valets of the garrison mounted at the back of the coach; and thus the cavalcade fet out on the road to Do-As the commodore could not bear the fatigue of jolting, they travelled at an easy pace during the first stage; so that the old gentleman had an opportunity of communicating his exhortations to his godson, with regard to his conduct abroad; he advised him, now that he was going into foreign parts, to be upon his guard against the fair weather of the French politesse, which was no more to be trusted than a whirlpool at

fea. He observed that many young men had gone to Paris with good cargoes of sense, and returned with a great deal of canvas, and no ballast at all, whereby they became crank all the days of their lives, and sometimes carried their keels above water. He desired Mr Jolter to keep his pupil out of the clutches of those shatking priests who lie in wait to make converts of all young strangers, and in a particular manner, cautioned the youth against carnal conversation with the Parisian dames, who, he understood, were no better than gaudy fireships ready primed with death and destruction.

Peregrine listened with great respect, thanking him for his kind admonitions, which he faithfully promifed to observe. They halted and breakfasted at the end of the stage, where Jolter provided himself with a horse, and the commodore fettled the method of corresponding with his nephew. The minute of parting being arrived, the old commander wrung his godfon by the hand, faying, " I wish thee a prosperous voyage and good cheer, my lad; my timbers are now a little crazy, d'ye fee; and God knows if I shall keep a-float 'till such time as I shall see thee again; but howsomever, hap what will, thou wilt find thyself in a condition to keep in the line with the best of thy fellows." He then reminded Gauntlet of his promife to call at the garrison in his return from Dover, and imparted fomething in a whifper to the governor, while Jack Hatchway, unable to speak, pulled his hat over his eyes, and squeezing Peregrine by the hand, gave him an iron pistol of curious workmanship, as a memorial of his friendship, Our youth, who was not unmoved on this occasion, received the pledge, which he acknowledged with the present of a silver tobacco-box bought for that purpose; and the two lads of the castle getting into the coach, were driven homeward, in a state of silent dejection.

Godfrey and Peregrine feated themselves in the post-chaise, and Jolter, the valet de chambre and lacquey, bestriding their beasts, they proceeded for the place of their destination, at which they arrived in safety that same night, and bespoke a passage in the pacquet-boat which was to sail next day.

CHAP. XXXIV.

He adjusts the method of his correspondence with Gauntlet; meets by accident with an Italian Charlatan, and a certain apothecary, who proves to be a noted character.

THERE the two friends adjusted the articles of their future correspondence, and Peregrine having written a letter to his mistress, wherein he renewed his former vows of eternal fidelity, it was intrusted to the care of her brother, while Mr Jolter, at the defire of his pupil, provided an elegant supper, and some excellent Burgundy, that they might spend this eve of his departure with the greater enjoyment.

Things being thus disposed, and a servant employed in laying the cloth, their ears were of a fudden invaded by a strange tumultuous noise in the next room, occasioned by the overthrow of tables, chairs and glasses, with odd unintelligible exclamations in broken French, and a jargon of threats in the Welsh dialect. Our young gentlemen ran immediately into the apartment from whence this clamour feemed to proceed, and found a thin meagre fwarthy figure gasping in all the agony of fear, under the hands of a fquat, thick, hard-featured man, who collered him with great demonstrations of wrath, faying, " If you was as mighty a magician as Owen Glendower, or the witch of Entor, look you, ay, or as Paul Beor himself, I will make pold, by the assistance of Got, and in his Majesty's naam, to seize and fecure, and confine and confront you, until fuch time as you fuffer and endure and undergo the pains and penalties of the law, for your diabolical practices. Shentlemens, added he, turning to our adventurers, I take you to witness that I protest, and affert, and avow that this person is as pig a necromancer as you would defire to behold; and I supplicate and beseech and entreat of you, that he may be prought pefore his petters, and compelled to give an account of his compact and commerce with the imps of darkness, look you; for, as I am a christian foul, and hope for joyful refurrection, I have this plessed evening seen him perform such things as could not be done without the aid and instruction and connivance of the Tevil."

Gauntlet feemed to enter into the fentiments of this Welsh reformer, and actually laid hold on the delinquent's shoulder, crying, "Damn the rafcal! I'll lay any wager that he's a Jefuit; for none of his order travel without a familiar." But Peregrine, who looked upon the affair in another point of view, interposed in behalf of the stranger, whom he freed from his aggressors, observing that there was no occasion to use violence, and asked, in French, what he had done to incur the censure of the informer. The poor foreigner. more dead than alive, answered that he was an Italian charlatan, who had practifed with some reputation in Padua, until he had the misfortune to attract the notice of the Inquisition, by exhibiting certain wonderful performances by his skill in natural knowledge, which that tribunal confidered as the effects of forcery, and perfecuted him accordingly; fo that he had been fain to make a precipitate retreat into France, where not finding his account in his talents, he was now arrived in England, with a view of practifing his art in London; and that in consequence of a fpecimen which he had given to a company below, the choleric gentleman had followed him up stairs to his own apartment, and assaulted him in that inhospitable manner. He therefore earnestly begged that our hero would take him under his protection; and if he entertained the least suspicion of his employing preternatural means in the operations of his art, he would freely communicate all the secrets in his possession.

The youth dispelled his apprehension, by affuring him that he was in no danger of suffering for his art in England, where, if ever he should be questioned by the zeal of superstitious individuals, he had nothing to do but appeal to the next justice of the peace, who would immediately acquit him of the charge, and punish his accusers for their impertinence and indiscretion.

He then told Gauntlet and the Welshman, that the stranger had a good action against them for an assault, by virtue of an act of parliament, which makes it criminal for any person to accuse another of sorcery and witchcrast, these idle notions being now justly exploded by all sensible men. Mr Jolter, who had by this time joined the company, could not help signifying his dissent from this opinion of his pupil, which he endeavoured to invalidate by the authority of scripture, quotations from the fathers, and the confession of many wretches who suffered death for having carried on correspondence with evil spirits, together with the evidence of Satan's Invisible World, and Moreton's history of Witchcrast.

The foldier corroborated these testimonies by facts that had happened within the sphere of his own knowledge, and in particular, mentioned the case of an old woman of the parish in which he was born, who used to transform herself into the shapes of fundry animals, and was at last killed by small shot in the character of an hare. Welshman thus supported, expressed his surprise at hearing that the legislature had shewn such tenderness for criminals of so dark a hue; and offered to prove by undeniable instances, that there was not a mountain in Wales, which had not been in his memory the scene of necromancy and witchcraft; "Wherefore, faid he, I am affuredly more than above aftonished, and confounded, and concerned, that the parliament of Great Pritain should in their great wisdoms, and their prudence, and their penetration, give countenance and encouragement, look you, to the works of darknessand the empire of Pelzepup; ofer and apove the evidence of holy writ, and those writers who have been quoted by that aggurate and learned shentleman, we are informed by profane hiftory of the pribbles and pranks of the old serpent. in the bortents and oragles of antiquity! as you will find in that most excellent historian Bolypius, and Titus Lifius; ay, and moreofer, in the commentaries of Julius Cæsar himself, who, as the 'ole 'orld knows, was a most famous, and a most faliant, and a most wise, and a most purdent, and a most fortunate cheistan, and a most renowned orator; ay, and a most elegant writer to boot."

- Vol. I. Cc

Peregrine did not think proper to enter the lists of dispute with three such obstinate antagonists; but contented himself with faying, that he believed it would be no difficult matter to impugn the arguments they had advanced; though he did not find himself at all disposed to undertake the talk, which must of course break in upon the evening's entertainment. He therefore invited the Italian to supper, and asked the same favour of his accuser, who seemed to have something curious and characteristic in his manner and disposition, resolving to make himself an eye-witness of those surprising feats, which had given offence to the choleric Briton. This scrupulous gentleman thanked our hero for his courtefy, but declined communicating with the stranger, until his character should be further explained; upon which his inviter, after some conversation with the charlatan, affured him that he would himfelf undertake for the innocence of his art; and then he was prevailed upon to favour them with his company.

In the course of the conversation, Peregrine learned that the Welchman was a surgeon of Canterbury, who had been called into a consultation at Dover; and understanding that his name was Morgan, took the liberty of asking, if he was not the person so respectfully mentioned in the Adventures of Roderick Random. Mr Morgan affumed a look of gravity and importance at this interrogation; and screwing up his mouth, answered, " Mr Rantum, my goot sir, I believe upon my conscience and salfation, is my very good frient and wellwisher; and he and I have been companions and messimates and fellow-sufferers, look you; but nevertheless, for all that, peradventure, he had not pehaved with fo much complaifance and affability and respect, as I might have expected from him; pecause he hath revealed and tivulged and buplished our private affairs, without my knowledge and privity and confent; but as Got is my Safiour, I think he had no evil intention in his pelly; and though there be certain persons, look you, who, as I am told, take upon them to laugh at his descriptions of my person, deportment and conversation, I do affirm and maintain, and infift with my heart, and my plood and my foul, that those persons are no petter than ignorant affes, and that they know not how to difcern and distinguish and define true ridicule, or as Aristotle calls it, the to Geloion, no more, look you, than a herd of mountain goats; for I will make pold to observe, and I hope this goot company will be of the same opinion, that there is nothing faid of me in that performance, which is unworthy of a christian and a shentleman."

Our young gentleman and his friends acquiefced in the justice of his observation. Peregrine particularly affured him, that from reading the book he had conceived the utmost regard and veneration for his character; and that he thought himself extremely fortunate in having this opportunity of enjoying his conversation. Morgan, not a little proud of fuch advances from a perfon of Peregrine's appearance, returned the compliment with a profusion of civility; and in the warmth of acknowledgement, expressed a defire of feeing him and his company at his house in Canterbury: " I will not pretend, or presume, kind fir, faid he, to entertain you according to your merits and deferts; but you shall be as welcome to my poor cottage, and my wife and family, as the Prince of Wales him felf; and it shall go hard, if one way or other, I do not find ways and means of making you confess that there is some goot fellowship in an antient Priton: for though I am no better than a simple apothecary, I have as goot plood circulating in my veins, as any he in the county; and I can describe and delineate and demonstrate my pedigree to the fatisfaction of the 'ole 'orld; and moreofer, by Got's goot providence and affiftance, I can afford to treat my friend with a joint of goot mutton, and a pottle of excellent wine, and no tradefman can peard me with a bill." He was congratulated on his happy fituation, and affured that our youth would visit him on his return from France, provided he should take Canterbury in his rout. As Peregrine manifested an inclination of being acquainted with the state of his affairs, he very complaifantly fatisfied his curiofity, by giving him to know that his fpouse had left off breeding after having bleffed. him with two boys and a girl, who were still alive and well; that he lived in good esteem with his neighbours, and by his practice; which was confiderably extended immediately after the publication of Roderick Random, had faved some thousand pounds. He had begun to think of retiring among his own relations in Glamorganthire, though his wife had made objection to this propofal, and opposed the execution of it with fuch obstinacy, that he had been at infinite pains in afferting his own prerogative, by convincing her, both from reason and example, that he was king and priest in his own family; and and that she owed the most implicit submission to his will. He likewise informed the company, that he had lately feen his friend Roderick, who had come from London on purpose to visit him, after having gained his lawfuit with Mr Topehall, who was obliged to pay Narcissa's fortune; that Mr Random, in all appearance, led a very happy life in the conversation of his father and bedfellow, by whom he enjoyed a fon and daughter; and that Morgan had received in a prefent from him, a piece of very fine linen of his wife's own making, feveral kits of falmon, and two casks of pickled pork, the most delicate he had ever tafted; together with a barrel of excellent herringsf or falmagundy, which he knew to be his favourite dish.

This topic of conversation being discussed, the Italian was defired to exhibit a specimen of his art, and in a few minutes conducted the company into the next room, where, to their great aftonishment and affright, they beheld a thousand ferpents winding along the ceiling. Morgan, ftruck with this phænomenon, which he had not feen before, began to utter exorcifins with great devotion, Mr Jolter ran terrified out of the room, Gauntlet drew his hanger, and Peregrine himfelf was disconcerted. The operator perceiving their confusion, defired them to retire; and calling them back in an instant, there was not a viper to be feen. He raised their admiration by fundry other performances; and the Welshman's former opinion and abhorence of his character began to recur, when, in confideration of the civility with which he had been treated, this Italian imparted to them all the methods by which he had acted fuch wonders, that were no other than the effects of natural causes curiously combined: so that Morgan became a convert to his skill, asked pardon for the fuspicion he had entertained, and invited the stranger to pass a few days with him at Canterbury. The scruples of Godfrey and Jolter were removed at the same time, and Peregrine testified his fatisfaction by an handsome gratuity, which he bestowed upon their entertainer.

The evening being spent in this sociable manner, every man retired to his respective chamber, and next morning they breakfasted together, when Morgan declared he would ftay 'till he should fee our hero fairly embarked, that he might have the pleasure of Mr Gauntlet's company to his own habitation; mean while, by the skipper's advice, the servants were ordered to carry a store of wine and provision on board in case of accident; and as the packet-boat could not fail before one o'clock, the company walked up hill to visit the castle, where they saw the sword of Julius Cæsar, and Queen Elizabeth's pocket-pistol, repeated Shakespear's description, while they survey'd the chalky cliffs on each fide, and cast their eyes towards the city of Calais, that was obscured by a thick cloud which did not much regale their eyefight, because it seemed to portend foul weather.

Having viewed every thing remarkable in this place, they returned to the pier, where after the compliments of parting, and an affectionate embrace between the two young gentlemen, Peregrine and his governor stept aboard, the fails were hoisted, and they went to sea with a fair wind, while Godfrey, Morgan and the conjurer, walked back to the inn, from whence they set out for Canterbury before dinner.

The End of the FIRST VOLUME.

and a continuous for all in the continuous transfer from home and blood and the will the work of I well an engral one have fairly traderial, it is being the bare this adequate of the Grantal a continue to his own religionary signs while by the throper's adelicaenter to seath a great to confirm of a summal of the stimulation to glas in that dear maditions of less traded the two Hoper work Marin 1922 a. of the setter of the total property of the setting with the first that the frame of fully the first halengen Joslin-Jandon auftroand a sone (sale to want the ground of the they the the theler unit on each fide, and can their even toand the content of the second reading to their institute of the control of the control and wind and planes ready freshing and bewayer arival to place, they explain the one pier, where after the are plintents of ordine, and as abelignoseemtrace believed the two same pendlement Pererenicapiblis greenet fiert aboudt the falle were regired, and they went to my man a fair wind, saile Godfrey, Morgan and the conjugate malled sol me sol. gong - or well which were with or force apter have dietore dinners, and he d

The Had of the Ither Verum

recorded the test the comments of

EB FEE

87.4M. Am